"A work of prodigious learning, in which every thing is recorded with relation to the Sanhedrim or Juridical Courts of the Jews, both before and after the promulgation of the Mosaic law together with such collateral notices of similar institutions in modern times and countries as he had interspersed in his other works of which the polity of the Jews is the primary subject."—DR. ' BOSWELL: 'Their [the French] Ana are good.'

" JOHNSON: 'A few of them are good; but we have one book of that kind better than any of them, Selden's Table-Talk."—Boswell's Johnson, chap. xlii.

"There is more weighty bullion sense in this book than I ever found in the same number of pages of any uninspired writer. . . . O, to have been with Selden over his glass of wine, making every accident an outlet and a vehicle of wisdom!"—COLERIDGE: Lit. Remains, ii. 361–2.

"This very short and small volume gives perhaps a more exalted notion of Selden's natural talents than any of his learned writings. . . . These sayings, . . . on the whole, are full of vigour, raciness, and a kind of scorn of the half-learned, far less rude, but more cutting, than that of Scaliger. It has been said that the Table-Talk of Selden is worth all the Ana of the Continent. In this I should be disposed to concur; but they are not exactly works of the same class."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 517, 518. See, also, 357, 510.

See, also, Gibbon's D. and F., chap. xlix., n.; Lord Campbell's C. Justices, i. chap. xvii.; Disraeli's Miscell. of Lit., ed. 1853, 178, 297; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1857, i. 276; and especially Mr. Singer's Biog. Preface. In addition to the above works, and a few minor pieces, Selden left several MSS., (see Bliss's Wood's Athen. Oxon., iii. 375; Biog. Brit., vi. 3623, CCC,) some of which—A Vindication of the Ancient Way of Parliament in England—were pub. with Nathaniel Bacon's Historical Discourse of the Uniformity of the Government of England, (5th and best ed., 1760, 4to;) and Wood says he had a great hand in the edition of the translation (Thomas North's) of Plutarch's Lives which was pub. Camb., 1657, fol. A collective edition of his works, in three vols., bound in six vols. folio, (some l. p.,) appeared London, 1726:—Opera Omnia tam edita, quam inedita, in tribus voluminibus, collegit ac recensuit Vitam Auctoris, Prefationes et Indices adjecit David Wilkins, S.T.P., (cum effigie.) Vol. i. consists of the treatises on the Jewish history and economy; vol. ii. contains Latin tracts on history and jurisprudence, letters and poems; vol. iii. is occupied with his English works. The student is referred to The Lives of John Selden, Esq., and Archbishop Usher, with Notices of the Principal English Men of Letters with whom they were connected, by John Aikin, M.D., Lon., 1811, 8vo, 1812, 8vo, (see Fosteriana, 1838, 188;) and the article in the Biographia Britannica, (1763, vi. 3605–3624,) with the sources on which it relies, should not be neglected. Usher's Life and Letters, Works of John Greaves, Clarendon's Life, Burnet's Reformation, Lloyd's Memoirs, Blount's Cens. Celeb. Authorum, Twell's Life of Pocock, the General Dict., Chalmers's Biog. Dict., Whitelocke's Swedish Embassy, Nichols's Lit. Anec., Aubrey's Letters of Eminent Persons, 1813, 3 vols. 8vo, and Brit. Crit., vol. xli., all contain notices of this very distinguished scholar. There is also a much later work, called Memoirs of John Selden, with Notices of the Political Contest during his Time, by George W. Johnson, 1835, 8vo. This volume we have not seen: the critic of the London Athenæum (1836, 286) does not seem to value it. In general, Selden's Latin style is far from happy:

"As to his writings, his style is universally condemned. Budd [Buddæus] has well observed that it is a melange of all that is bad, as well as all that is good, in the Latin language. Le Clerc complains of the trouble caused to the reader by his obscurity as well as the perplexity of his method, of which he has given a remarkable instance. We have given another in the article of Sir Henry Spelman; and a third is superadded, by a mistake, in the General Dictionary."—Biog. Brit., vi. 3624.

"His style in all his writings seems harsh, and sometimes obscure; which is not wholly to be imputed to the abstract subjects of which he commonly treated, out of the paths trod by other men, but to a little undervaluing the beauty of a style, and too much propensity to the language of antiquity: but in his conversation he was the most clear discourser, and had the best faculty in making hard things easy and present to the understanding, of any man that hath been known."—EARL OF CLARENDON: Life.

"He was a man of very great learning, extremely well versed in the Jewish laws and antiquities; the Oriental languages were familiar to him; and the works which he has published upon the Greek antiquities demonstrate that his knowledge was as eminent in this way as in the antiquities of Scripture; but he is a negligent, obscure, and perplexed writer. He often leaves the matter in hand, and falls into digressions; and there is very little order or method in his works."—AUGUSTINE CALMET.

In his description of the mixed Assembly of divines and laymen, "like Jews and Christians in a ship together," John Cleaveland thus notices our author:

> "And Selden is a galliard by himself,
> And well may be; there's more Divines in him
> Than in all this their Jewish Sanhedrim."

To quote more testimonials to the extent of his erudition would not be difficult. Grotius calls him the glory of the English nation; and Grotius had well weighed his honoured rival:

"D. Seldeni præclara jam habuimus ex Hebræorum scriptis depromptæ; quare in animo illi esse novis nos muneribus suis ditare gaudeo. De Synedrio pauca pro materiæ ubertate dedit nobis Cochius. Non dubito quin D. Seldenus pro ista sua multijugi lectione plurima scitu utilia ac jacunda possit velitque addere. Nec minus placet alterum recenditæ eruditionis argumentum de Jure Gentium, quale Hebræi coluere."—HUGO GROTIUS: Epist. ad Samson Johnson, Lutet., 20–30 Sept. 1638.

"Felix tunc erat atque beata Terra Angliæ, &c.:

"England was then blessed and happy when she brought forth that inexhaustible treasure of Hebrew antiquities and various erudition, in the 44th [84th] year of the last century, at Salvington. . . . Hence sprung that profound knowledge in the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Rabbinical, Syriac, and Arabic tongues; as also his perfect acquaintance with all parts of philosophy, and of the laws both divine and human."—THEOP. SPIZELIUS: Literat. Common., xxx. 908: Biog. Brit., vi. 3624, CCC.

"The most learned Mr. Selden, one of the greatest men that any age has produced."—BURNET: Hist. Reformat., book iii.

"Mr. Selden was a person whom no character can flatter, or transmit in any expressions equal to his merit and virtue. He was of such stupendous learning in all kinds and in all languages, as may appear from his excellent and transcendent writings, that a man would have thought he had been entirely conversant among books, and had never spent an hour but in reading and writing; yet his humanity, courtesy, and affability were such, that he would have been thought to have been bred in the best courts, but that his good nature, charity, and delight in doing good and in communicating all he knew exceeded that breeding."—EARL OF CLARENDON, (his intimate friend for many years:) Life.

"John Selden, unsurpassed for learning and ability in the whole splendid history of the English bar, on every book of whose library was written, 'Before every thing, Liberty!'"—CHARLES SUMNER: Speech on Our Foreign Relations, Sept. 10, 1863. See, also, ELSYNGE, HENRY.

Such was the great Selden: such his public services, his many virtues, his vast accomplishments. Did he place his trust, did he find his happiness, in these?—or had he learned "a more excellent way"? He shall answer for himself:

"I have taken much pains to know every thing that was esteemed worth knowing among men; but, with all my disquisitions and readings, nothing more remains with me to comfort me, at the close of life, but this passage of St. Paul, 'It is a faithful saying, worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners.' To this I cleave, and herein I find rest!"

When he was dying, he said to Archbishop Usher,

"I have surveyed most of the learning that is among the sons of men, and my study is filled with books and manuscripts [he had 8000 volumes in his library] on various subjects; but at present I cannot recollect any passage out of all my books and papers whereon I can rest my soul, save this from the sacred Scriptures: 'The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ: who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.'—[Tit. ii. 11–14.]"

Serres, Olivia Wilmot, 1772–1834, wife of the preceding, and the reputed daughter of Robert Wilmot, a carpenter of Warwick, in 1815 professed to have been informed that Henry, Duke of Cumberland, brother of George III., was her father. This claim—effectually silenced in Parliament, June 18, 1823, by the exposition of Sir Robert Peel, (see Lon. Gent. Mag., 1823, i. 637) —was in 1861 revived by Mrs. Serres's daughter, Mrs. Ryves. The case was tried in June, 1866, and the jury found a verdict against the claimant. The London Times treats the case as an imposture. See, also, Hannah Lightfoot, &c., by W. J. Settle, Elkanah, 1648–1723–4, a native of Dunstable, Bedfordshire; entered of Trinity College, Oxford, 1666; came to London probably in the next year, and spent the rest of his life as an author and politician. He acquired some reputation by his tragedies of Cambyses, (Lon., 1671, '72, '75, '92, 4to,) Herod and Mariamne, (1673, 4to,) The Empress of Morocco, (1673, 4to,) and other dramatic pieces and poems and political pamphlets, but lost more, in the long run, by his squabbles with Dryden,—in whose life (p. 523, supra) we have already introduced "The City Poet" to the reader. The Empress of Morocco, 1673, 4to, said to be the first play in the English language which was illustrated by engravings, (see Scott's Life of Dryden,) is very rare, and was priced in 1859 £2 5*s*. Accounts of his works and his quarrels—neither of sufficient importance to be detailed here—will be found in Athen. Oxon.; Johnson's, (see Cunningham's ed.,) Malone's, and Scott's Dryden; Biog. Dramat.; Watt's Bibl. Brit.; Lowndes's Bibl. Man.; Nichols's Lit. Anec.; Spence's Anec.; Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors and Calam. of Lit. See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., 1850, ii. 367. In the decline of life he composed drolls for a booth in Bartholomew Fair, and, in the farce of St. George for England, represented a dragon, enclosed in a case of leather of his own invention: hence Dr. Young:

> "Poor Elkanah, all other changes past,
> For bread in Smithfield dragons hiss'd at last,
> Spit streams of fire to make the butchers gape,
> And found his manners suited to his shape."

> Epistle to Alexander Pope.

Subsequently he gained admission into the Charter-House, (so graphically described by Washington Irving,) and there died. His great rival—for at one time Settle was a rival of the author of The Hind and Panther—thus takes off Settle's literary characteristics:

> "Doeg, though without knowing how or why,
> Made still a blundering kind of melody,
> Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,
> Through sense and nonsense, never out nor in;
> Free from all meaning, whether good or bad,
> And, in one word, heroically mad."

Sewall, William Bartlett, son of Daniel Sewall, (supra,) b. at York, Maine, 1782, graduated at Harvard College, 1803, and became an eminent member of the Portland (Maine) Bar. He was the author of a Register for Maine; co-author, with Judge Bourne, of Kennebunk, of a Register of Maine for 1820; assisted his father in almanac-making; in early life was a contributor to The Pilgrim, The Prowler, The Night-Hawk, and The Torpedo; and subsequently edited The Portland Advertiser. See Willis's Law, Courts, and Lawyers of Maine, 1863, 488.

Seward, Anna, 1747–1809, a daughter of the Rev. Thomas Seward, (infra,) was for many years one of the principal literary characters of the native city of the great lexicographer. Many references to this lady will be found in Boswell's Life of Johnson, (see Index to Croker's ed., 1848;) and other notices of her occur in Mrs. Elwood's Literary Ladies of England, Lockhart's Scott, Southey's Life, and Nichols's Illust. of Lit. "She was endowed with considerable genius, and with an ample portion of that fine enthusiasm which sometimes may be taken for it; but her taste was far from good, and her numerous productions (a few excepted) are disfigured by florid ornament and elaborate magnificence."—Rev. Alexander Dyce: Spec. of Brit. Poetesses.

"Misses Seward and Williams, and half a dozen more of those harmonious virgins, have no imagination, no novelty. Their thoughts and phrases are like their gowns,—old remnants cut and turned."—Horace Walpole to the Countess of Ossory, Nov. 4, 1776: Letters, ed. 1861, ix. 73. See, also, 134, viii. 241, 555.

"Miss Seward is affected and superfluous; but now and then she writes a good line: for example, and she can paint a natural picture."—Leigh Hunt: Men, Women, and Books, vol. ii.

'And sultry silence brooded o'er the hills;'

See, also, Moir's Sketches Poet. Lit., ed. 1856, 12; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1811, ii. 154, 241; Blackw. Mag., xli. 408. Dr. Darwin called her "the inventress of epic elegy;" and Mr. Polwhele (see his Unsexed Females) eulogizes her poetical powers in fervent strains. 6. Letters of Anna Seward written between the Years 1784 and 1807, 6 vols, p. 8vo. Scott did not edit this collection, as has been asserted; but he examined the MS. and struck out many passages relating to himself. See Lockhart's Life of Scott, chap. xxii., where Lockhart admits that, "however affected and absurd, Miss Seward's prose is certainly far better than her verse." Bishop Percy was concerned to find in "this voluminous publication such a display of vanity, egotism, and, it grieves him to add, malignity, as is scarce compensated for by the better parts of her epistles."—Nichols's Illust. of Lit., viii. 427. See, also, 429.

Seymour, Anne, Margaret, and Jane, daughters of Edward Seymour, first Duke of Somerset, (infra,) are said to have composed a century of Latin distichs on the death of Margaret de Valois, Queen of France, which were trans. into French, Greek, and Italian, and printed at Paris, in 1551, under the title of Le Tombeau de Marguerite de Valois, Royne de Navarre. Anne married, first, the Earl of Warwick, secondly, Sir Edward Hunton; the other two died single. There are reasons for doubting the authorship ascribed to these ladies: compare Ballard's Memoirs, 140, and Park's Walpole's R. and N. Authors, i. 293–4.

Seymour, Michael Hobart, brother of Aaron Crossley Hobart Seymour, (supra,) and also a native of Ireland, after graduating at Trinity College, Dublin, held several curacies in Ireland, where he became very unpopular in consequence of his attacks upon the dogmas and practices of the Church of Rome. Removing to England, he officiated for several years as Evening Lecturer at St. George the Martyr, Southwark, and Afternoon Lecturer at St. Ann's, Blackfriars. After his marriage with Maria, Baroness Brounmill, he removed to Bath, where he has since resided, without any preferment. A notice of Mr. Seymour as a preacher will be found in Grant's Metropolitan Pulpit, i. 266–81. As an author, the following is his record: 1. A Pilgrimage to Rome, Lon., 1848, 8vo; 4th ed., 1851. Commended by Ch. of Eng. Quar. Rev., Oct. 1848, Lon. Athen., 1848, 675, &c. 2. Mornings among the Jesuits at Rome, 1849, p. 8vo; N. Y., 1849, 12mo; 5th ed., Lon., 1852. Commended by Eng. The work professes to be "an improvement of Mr. Stow's and other Surveys," and it includes Dugdale's History of the Old Church of Saint Paul's. The real author was John Motley, (supra.)

Shadwell, Thomas, b. 1640, in Norfolk, and educated at Caius College, Cambridge, entered at the Middle Temple, but soon deserted law for the drama; in 1668 acquired fame by his comedy of the Sullen Lovers; in 1688 was made Poet-Laureate; and in 1692 was cut off by an over-dose of opium. His publications (all, save the last, in 4to) are: 1. Sullen Lovers; Com., Lon., 1668, '70, '93. 2. Royal Shepherdess; Tragi-Com., 1669, '91. 3. Humourists; Com., 1671. 4. Miser; Com., 1672, '91. 5. 8. Virtuoso; Com., 1676, '91, 1704.

"The Virtuoso of Shadwell does not maintain his character with equal strength to the end; and this was that writer's general fault. Wycherley used to say of him 'That he knew how to start a fool very well; but that he was never able to run him down.'"—POPE: Spence's Anec., Sect. 1.

Halliwell, (q. v., No. 37,) 1853, 4to. 14. Tenth Satyr of Juvenal; Latin and English, with Notes, 1687. 15. Squire of Alsatia; Com., 1688, '89. Produced the author £130 at one representation. Scott draws largely on this comedy in The Fortunes of Nigel; but Shadwell himself borrows from The Adelphi of Terence. 16. Bury Fair; Com., 1689. 17. Two Poems on the Prince of Orange and Queen Mary, 1689. 18. Amorous Bigotte, with the second part of Teague O'Divelly, 1690. See No. 13. 19. Scowrers; Com., 1691. 20. "It was in the last drama of Shadwell that the hypocrisy and knavery of these speculators was for the first time exposed to public ridicule."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of Eng., iv. chap. xix., (q. v. for quotations.)

22. Ode to the King, fol. A collective edition of his Dramatic Works was pub. 1720, 4 vols. 12mo. But to the majority of readers Shadwell is known less by these twenty-odd publications than by his involuntary eminence as the hero of Dryden's MacFlecknoe and the original of his Og. (vide DRYDEN, JOHN, pp. 523–24, supra.)

"In prose and verse was own'd without dispute
Through all the realms of Nonsense absolute.
* * * * * *
Mature in dulness from his tender years,
Shadwell alone, of all my sons, is he
Who stands confirm'd in full stupidity:
The rest to some faint meaning make pretence,
But Shadwell never deviates into sense."—MacFlecknoe.

Rochester is more just:

"Of all our modern wits, none seem to me
Once to have touched upon true comedy,
But hasty Shadwell and slow Wycherley.
Shadwell's unfinished works do yet impart
Great proofs of nature's force, though none of art."
A Session of Poets.

Yet Rochester himself observed that "if Shadwell had burnt all he wrote, and printed all he spoke, he would have had more wit and humour than any other poet."

"Shadwell, and Etherege, and the famous Afra Behn, have endeavoured to make the stage as grossly immoral as their talents permitted; but the two former, especially Shadwell, are not destitute of humour."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 525. See, also, 484.

"'Nahum Tate, of all my predecessors, must have ranked the towest of the laureates, if he had not succeeded Shadwell.'"—SOUTHEY: Life of Cowper.

"This is very unjust: Shadwell's plays are among the best of the Charles II. period of our drama."—CAMPBELL: Essay on Eng. Poetry, ed. 1848, 247, n.

Otway, of his contemporaries, and Sir Walter Scott, (see his Essay on the Drama, and Lockhart's Scott, ch. xviii., n.,) among later critics, may be ranked with the admirers of Shadwell's natural abilities. See Langbaine's Dram. Writers; Biog. Brit.; Biog. Dramat.; Malone's Dryden; Cibber's Lives; Nichols's Poems; Austin and Ralph's Lives of the Poets-Laureate; Lon. Athen., 1853, 937; Blackw. Mag., ix. 280, 282. Shadwell was a warm admirer of Ben Jonson's dramatic powers, and perhaps as much overvalued his own abilities (see his Prefaces to Psyche, Timon of Athens, &c.) as they were undervalued by Dryden. But he was by no means so self-reliant as to scorn to profit from his predecessors. The Sullen Lovers, The Royal Shepherdess, Psyche, The Libertine, Timon of Athens, The Miser, The True Widow, The Squire of Alsatia, Bury Fair, and The Scowrers, all strut the stage in borrowed plumes. Fortunately, Mr. Thomas Scott (see Lockhart's Scott, ut supra) abandoned his unwise design of a new edition of the works of this indecent playwright. A more honourable monument to his memory is the one erected in Westminster Abbey by his son, Sir John Shadwell.

Notices of this eminent Orientalist will be found in Dict. Univ. des Contemp., par G. Vapereau, Paris, 1858, 1587, and Lon. Gent. Mag., 1858, ii. 197. In 1856 Mr. Shakespear appropriated £2500 to the benefit of the "Shakspeare House" at Stratford-upon-Avon; and by his will he bequeathed a like amount, together with £30 per annum, for the same object. The Court of Chancery, however, "pronounced the bequest void for uncertainty, and the annuity invalid under the Mortmain Act." (Lon. Athen., 1860, ii. 78, q. v.)

"He never professed to be related to the great bard, but thought it probable that he was descended from a branch of the family. He was very particular in spelling his own name in the way we have given it, without the final e, whilst he always wrote that of the poet thus: 'Shakspeare.'"—Sheffield Daily Telegraph: Lon. Gent. Mag.: ut supra.

He left a fortune of over £250,000—a large amount for a scholar to amass.

Shakespear, Sir Richmond Campbell, b. 1809, entered the E. I Co.'s Service, Bengal Artillery, 1827, and distinguished himself 1843, and 1848–49: Knighted, 1841; brevet Lieut.-Col., 1849; d. 1861. Shakespear, Shakespeare, Shakspeare, or Shakspere, William, the most illustrious of the sons of men, the son of John and Mary Shakspeare, of Stratford-upon-Avon, was baptized in the parish church of that place, April 26, 1564, supposed to be the third day after his birth.

The proper orthography of the name is the first of the difficulties which embarrass the biographers of the great poet. We have confined our heading to the four modes in modern use; but an extension of the list will gratify the curiosity of those who have not carried their researches beyond the title-pages of editors and commentators.

"I can vouch," remarks an eminent antiquary, upon whom the grave has recently closed, "for the following forms, all taken from writings of nearly the poet's own age. . . .

"Shaksper, Schakesper, Schakespeyr, Shagspere, Shaxper, Shaxpere, Shaxpeare, Shaxsper, Shaxspere, Shaxsepere, Shakspere, Shakspear, Shakspeere, Shackspeare, Shackespeare, Shackespere, Shakspeyr, Shakesper, Shakespere, Shakeseper, Shakyspere, Shakespire, Shakespeire, Shakespear, Shakaspeare.

"These are all manifestly of the same type; and to these varieties others might be added. In two instances I have met with the name written Saxpere. . . . Shakespeare or Shakespear kept its ground as the received and proper orthography of the poet's name till the time of the two very eminent commentators Steevens and Malone. In an evil hour they agreed, for no apparent reason, to abolish the e in the first syllable, so that if the orthography is to represent the pronunciation, or the pronunciation to be conformable with the orthography, the name should be pronounced as in the second of the three modes above mentioned. A contemporary critic of inferior note in 1785 introduced another variation. In his hands the name became Shakspere, with the object, no doubt, of bringing back the orthography to the form in which the name is said to be found traced by the poet's own hand in his will and in other writings."—Joseph Hunter: New Illust. of the Life, &c. of Shakespeare, Lon., 1845, i. 5.

Mr. Hunter's "inferior critic" is John Pinkerton, and the book referred to his Letters of Literature, by Robert Heron, 1783, &c., 8vo. But Sir Frederick Madden is not to be thus designated; and his Observations on an Autograph of Shakspere, and the Orthography of his Name, 1838, 8vo, is thus commented on by one of the most cautious of modern critics:

"Though I shall not innovate in a work of this kind, not particularly relating to Shakspeare, I must observe that Sir Frederick Madden has offered very specious reasons (in the Archæologia, vol. xxvii.) for believing that the poet and his family spelt their name Shakspere, and that there are at least no exceptions in his own autographs, as has commonly been supposed. A copy of Florio's translation of Montaigne, a book which he had certainly read, (see Malone's note on Tempest, act ii. scene i.,) has been lately discovered, with the name W. Shakspere clearly written in it; and there seems to be no reason to doubt that it is a genuine signature. This book has very properly been placed in the British Museum, among the choice κειμηλια of that repository."—Hallam: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1845, ii. 175, n.

By reference to the Gentleman's Magazine, 1840, ii. 35, (The Autograph Signatures of Shakspere,) it will be seen that Sir Frederick Madden has since the date of his Observations obtained further light upon the subject, confirmatory of his previous conclusions: nor should the inquirer fail to read the letters upon this vexata quæstio in the Gentleman's Magazine, 1840, i. 39, (by Isaac Disraeli,) 161, 374, 591, (by John Bruce,) 262, (by Sir F. Madden,) 264, 474, (by John William Burgon,) 369, (by Joseph Hunter,) 379, (by Bolton Corney.)

See, also, J. Harris's Fac-Similes of all the Known Autographs of Shakspeare, (six in number,) 4to sheet; and for the results of later investigations, see Lon. Reader, 1864, ii. 801. In 1869 Mr. Joseph Burtt, in a letter to the London Times, gives an account of a supposed newly-discovered autograph of Shakspeare pasted in an Amsterdam edition, 1630, r. 32mo, of the works of Ovid; and in the same year (1869) Mr. Michel Chasles purchased over one hundred MS. letters purporting to be in the handwriting of the dramatist, and containing twelve of his sonnets. We need hardly add that M. Chasles's papers, at least, are manifest forgeries. (See Amer. Lit. Gaz., Oct. 15, 1869, 374: letter from Paris, Sept. 15, 1869.) Of the four forms exhibited at the commencement of this article, the first is now seldom seen: for the use of each of the others we cite several authorities as representatives of their respective schools:

Shakespeare: First, Second, and Third (1663) Folios, Shakespeare Society, Collier, Halliwell, Hunter, Disraeli, Dyce, Staunton, R. G. White, T. P. Barton, H. G. Bohn, W. G. Clark, and W. Aldis White. This form is rapidly supplanting Shakspeare. Shakspere never had much currency.

Shakspeare: Steevens, Malone, Alex. Chalmers, Dr. N. Drake, De Quincey, H. W. Dixon, (editor Athenæum,) J. W. Burgon, Prof. "John Shakespear," (ut supra,) and many publishers, editors, and literary persons.

Shakspere: J. Pinkerton, Sir F. Madden, Charles Knight, John Bruce, Bolton Corney.

Mr. R. G. White (Memoirs of Shakespeare, 1865, p. 6) gives us all, save Shakesper, that we find in Mr. Hunter's list, and five variations — Chacksper, Shaxpur, Schakspere, Schakespeire, Schakspear—not found in the latter.

And Mr. George Wise has recently amused himself by drawing up a chart (Phila., 1868) which exhibits 1906 ways of spelling the name.

As we are obliged to select one of the thirty-two modes thus cited, or to hunt up a new method from the archives of the past, we shall perhaps exercise a becoming modesty by following Mr. Hallam in the use of the ordinary form,—Shakspeare.

And we know not that we could better introduce the brief biographical sketch of our illustrious subject, which we contemplate, than by the citation of a few lines from the same judicious authority:

"Of William Shakspeare, whom, through the mouths whom he has inspired to body forth the modifications of his immense mind, we seem to know better than any human writer, it may be truly said that we scarcely know any thing. We see him, so far as we do see him, not in himself, but in a reflex image from the objectivity in which he was manifested: he is Falstaff, and Mercutio, and Malvolio, and Jaques, and Portia, and Imogen, and Lear, and Othello; but to us he is scarcely a determined person, a substantial reality of past time, the man Shakspeare. The two greatest names in poetry are to us little more than names. If we are not yet come to question his unity, as we do that of 'the blind old man of Scio's rocky isle,'—an improvement in critical acuteness doubtless reserved for a distant posterity,—we as little feel the power of identifying the young man who came up from Stratford, was afterwards an indifferent player in a London theatre and retired to his native place in middle life, with the author of Macbeth and Lear, as we can give a historic personality to Homer. All that insatiable curiosity and unwearied diligence have hitherto detected about Shakspeare serves rather to disappoint and perplex us than to furnish the slightest illustration of his character. It is not the register of his baptism, or the draft of his will, or the orthography of his name, that we seek. No letter of his writing, no record of his conversation, no character of him drawn with any fulness by a contemporary, has been produced."

These observations, published by Mr. Hallam in the first edition of his Introduction to the Literature of Europe, in 1837–39, are but an amplification of the oft-quoted lines of George Steevens, written in 1780:

"All that is known with any degree of certainty concerning Shakspeare is—that he was born at Stratford-upon-Avon—married and had children there—went to London, where he commenced actor, and wrote poems and plays—returned to Stratford, made his will, died, and was buried."

In a note appended to the foregoing, dated 1842, Mr. Hallam adds,

"I am not much inclined to qualify this paragraph in consequence of the petty circumstances relating to Shakspeare which have been lately brought to light, and which rather confirm than otherwise what I have said. But I laud the labours of Mr. Collier, Mr. Hunter, and other collectors of such crumbs; though I am not sure that we should not venerate Shakspeare as much if they had left him undisturbed in his obscurity. To be told that he played a trick to a brother player in a licentious amour, or that he died of a drunken frolic, as a stupid vicar of Stratford recounts (long after the time) in his diary, [see Diary of Rev. John Ward, &c., 1648–1679, 8vo, 1839,] does not exactly inform us of the man who wrote Lear. If there was a Shakspeare of earth, as I suspect, there was also one of heaven; and it is of him that we desire to know something."—Vol. ii., Part 2, chap. vi.

Perhaps Mr. Hallam does scant justice to the Shakspearian archæologists; but this is a matter which the intelligent reader must decide for himself; and our duty will be best discharged—not by a hopeless attempt at a digest of the vast mass of materials which patient industry has given to the world, but—by an indication of the best sources of knowledge upon a subject which seems to be daily assuming increasing importance in the eyes of English and foreign students.

John Shakspeare, the poet's father, has been variously represented as a butcher, a dealer in wool, a glover, and a landed proprietor and cultivator, and may have combined these callings, or have followed them at different periods.

His wife, the poet's mother, was Mary, daughter of Robert Arden, of Wilmecote, and a descendant of a very ancient family. Mr. John T. Burgess states (in London Athenæum, 1867) that Turchill, a Saxon earl of the time of William the Conqueror, was the ancestor of the Arden family, which is probably descended from Alfred the Great. Mr. George Russell French, in a letter to the editors of the "Cambridge Shakespeare," (W. G. Clark and W. A. Wright,) announces that in the preparation of his Genealogical Notices of the Shakspeare and Arden families he has found the link which unites Shakspeare with the Ardens of Warwickshire. The results of these researches were promised for the supplementary volumes of the "Cambridge Shakespeare." See Shakespeareana Genealogica, Compiled by G. R. French, Macmillan, 1869, 8vo.

It is presumed that William was a student at the free school of Stratford; and after leaving this academy he seems to have acted as assistant to his father. What other occupation he found, we know not: Aubrey calls him a schoolmaster; Malone, a lawyer's clerk; Rowe, a wool-stapler or butcher. Whatever may have been his profession, its duties were not so engrossing as to exclude all thoughts of the tender passion which he has so well portrayed; for when he was eighteen years and a half old he was married to Anne Hathaway, of the hamlet of Shottery, parish of Stratford, then in her twenty-sixth year. In the absence of all contemporaneous or later evidence on the subject, Mr. De Quincey (life of Shakspeare, in Encyc. Brit.) is so kind as to favour us with a circumstantial account of the courtship, which makes the lady the suitor, and an anxious suitor.

In 1586 or 1587, as is supposed, he left Stratford for London,—whether driven from home for meddling with Sir Thomas Lucy's deer, or otherwise, is vehemently contested by antiquaries. In 1589 he was a joint proprietor in the Blackfriars Theatre; before 1592 he was well known as an actor and as a playwright; and in 1593 he published his poem of Venus and Adonis, which he thus dedicates to Lord Southampton:

"I know not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your lordship, nor how the world will censure me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burden; only if your honour seems but pleased, I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours till I have honoured you with some graver labour. But if the first heir of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so noble a godfather, and never after ear so barren a land, for fear it yield me still so bad a harvest. I leave it to your honourable survey, and your honour to your heart's content, which I wish may always answer your own and the world's hopeful expectation."

The modest apprehensions of the author proved to be unfounded: the "land" was most fertile, the harvest luxuriant. Lucrece—to continue the enumeration of his poems—was published in 1594; The Passionate Pilgrim, in 1599; the Sonnets, in 1609. As regards the dates of the composition of his plays, much diversity of opinion exists. We give three tables, on the authority of as many eminent critics:

	Malone.	Chalmers.	Drake.

Drake rejects what, he remarks, "has very improperly, in modern times, been ascribed to Shakspeare as the First Part of his King Henry the Sixth. The spuriousness of this part, indeed, has been so satisfactorily proved by Mr. Malone that no doubt can be supposed any longer to rest on the subject," (Shaksp. and his Times, ii. 292;) and he admits Pericles. Of course he rejects Titus Andronicus. But this, as well as Pericles, is included in the editions of Shakspeare Plays; making, with the thirty-five in Malone's and Chalmers's lists, thirty-seven in all.

"It is generally believed that he had much to do with the tragedy of Pericles, which is now printed among his works, and which external testimony—though we should not rely too much on that as to Shakspeare—has assigned to him; but the play is full of evident marks of an inferior hand. Its date is unknown. Drake supposes it to have been his earliest work, [1590,] rather from its inferiority than on any other ground. Titus Andronicus is now by common consent denied to be in any sense a production of Shakspeare; very few passages, I should think not one, resemble his manner."—Hallam: Lit. Hist. of Europe, vol. ii. chap. vi., (q. v.)

"The external evidence that Titus Andronicus was written by Shakspere is decisive; it is printed in the folio collection, which does not contain one other doubtful play; it is enumerated by Meres, in 1598, as a play of Shakspere's. Pericles is not printed in the folio collection, and is not mentioned by Meres; but others of Shakspere's contemporaries attributed it to him. The internal evidence, in many respects, is against Titus Andronicus being the work of our Poet; the same species of evidence, in many respects, will assign Pericles to him. This is a question which has received much careful examination, and which requires much more."—Charles Knight: Postscript to vol. vi. of his Pictorial ed. of Shakspere, Dec. 21, 1841.

"Meres was personally acquainted with the poet, and so very intimately that the latter read over to him his sonnets before they were printed. I cannot conceive that all the critical sceptics in the world would ever be able to get over such a testimony."—Schlegel's Dramat. Lit., Lect. XXVI.

The researches of recent investigators exhibit plausible hypotheses which dispute, in some cases well-sustained evidence which disproves, some of the dates in the preceding table, (see remarks upon the chronology of the plays, in Edin. Rev., July, 1840, 474–76;) but a critical examination of a subject of such uncertainty and vast extent will be readily excused by the general reader.

The Seven Doubtful Plays of Shakspeare, so called, are: I. Pericles, 1609, 4to. II. Locrine, 1595, 4to, (Heber, Pt. 2, 5487, £11 11*s.*, bought by G. Daniel, and sold at his sale, July, 1864, £103 19*s.*; Earl of Charlemont, Aug. 1865, 151, wanting one leaf, £33 10*s.*) III. Sir John Oldcastle, 1600, 4to. IV. Thomas Lord Cromwell, 1602, 4to, (ed. of 1613, 4to, Earl of Charlemont, 153, £9 9*s.*) V. The London Prodigall, 1605, 4to, (Earl of Charlemont, 141, £13 5*s.*) VI. The Puritan, 1607, 4to. VII. A Yorkshire Tragedy, 1608, 4to. These, with Additional Observations, and the Genuine Poems of Shakspeare, were published together, with Notes by the Editor [Edmund Malone] and others, in 2 vols. 8vo, in 1780, as a Supplement to the 2d edition of Johnson and Steevens's edition of Shakspeare's Plays, 1778, 10 vols. 8vo. Arden of Feversham, 1592, 4to, Edward the Third, 1596, 4to, and other plays, have also been ascribed to Shakspeare; and the Two Noble Kinsmen, 1634, 4to, bears the names of John Fletcher and William Shakspeare; and The Birth of Merlin, printed 1662, is ascribed in the title-page to William Shakspeare and William Rowley. A number of other plays, &c., which need not be particularly noticed, have sought the protection of the same great name. Mr. William Gilmore Simms, of South Carolina, published in one volume, 8vo, New York, 1848, A Supplement to the Plays of Shakspeare, comprising the Seven Dramas which have been ascribed to his pen, but which are not included with his Writings in Modern Editions; edited, with Notes and an Introduction to each Play. See, also, Bohn's Lowndes, Pt. 8, 1863, 2302, (Spurious or Doubtful Plays, &c.)

It is supposed that Shakspeare ceased to act upon the stage after 1603, in which year he was a performer in one of Ben Jonson's plays. In 1605 he purchased a moiety of the tithes of Stratford, and the few last years of his life were spent in the handsomest house (New Place) of that beautiful town; where, says Rowe, "his pleasurable wit and good nature engaged him in the acquaintance, and entitled him to the friendship, of the gentlemen of the neighbourhood." (Reed's Shaksp., i. 74–76.)

"Every one agrees that during the last three or four years of his life Shakspere ceased to write. Yet we venture to think that every one is in error. The opinion is founded upon a belief that he only finally left London towards the close of 1613. We have shown, from his purchase of a large house at Stratford, his constant acquisition of landed property there, his active engagements in the business of agriculture, the interest which he took in matters connected with his property in which his neighbours had a common interest, that he must have partially left London before this period. There were no circumstances, so far as we can collect, to have prevented him finally leaving London several years before 1613. . . . When the days of leisure arrived, is it reasonable to believe that the mere habit of his life would not assert its ordinary control,—that the greatest of intellects would suddenly sink to the condition of an every-day man, cherishing no high plans for the future, looking back with no desire to equal and excel the work of the past? . . . The marvellous accuracy, the real substantial learning, of the three Roman plays of Shakspere, present the most complete evidence to our minds that they were the result of a profound study of the whole range of Roman history, including the nicer details of Roman manners, not in those days to be acquired in a compendious form, but to be brought out by diligent reading alone. It is pleasant to believe that the last years of Shakspere's life were those of an earnest student. We confidently ask if the belief be not a reasonable one?"—CHARLES KNIGHT: William Shakspere: a Biography, ed. 1851, 305, 306, 307.

He died on the 23d of April, 1616,—as is supposed, his 53d birthday,—and on the 25th was buried on the north side of the chancel of the great church of Stratford.

"Whatever was the immediate cause of his last illness, we may well believe that the closing scene was full of tranquillity and hope; and that he who had sought, perhaps more than any other man, to look beyond the material and finite things of the world, should rest at last in the 'peace which passeth all understanding,—in that assured belief which the opening of his will has expressed with far more than formal solemnity: 'I commend my soul into the hands of God my Creator, hoping and assuredly believing, through the only merits of Jesus Christ my Saviour, to be made partaker of life everlasting.'"—CHARLES KNIGHT: ubi supra, 317.

As regards the immediate family of the great poet, we can offer nothing more pertinent than the following:

"Mr. Landor, with a generous sway of blood, has written a letter to the newspapers on a sin under which the nation is said to lie,—the sin of ingratitude. A descendant of Shakspeare alive and starving! To the rescue, for very shame! Such is the warcry of the generous sage of Bath. But Mr. Landor's emotions are of that lively kind which cannot wait the calm justification of facts. Little as we know of Shakspeare, we know with absolute certainty that he has no descendant now alive. Mr. J. O. Halliwell has put the circumstances conveniently together in an answer to the cry for new subscriptions: 'At Shakspeare's death in 1616 his family consisted of his wife, his daughter Susanna, married to Dr. Hall, his daughter Judith, married to Thomas Quiney, and Elizabeth Hall, a granddaughter, the only child of Susanna Shakspeare. Judith Quiney had several children, who were all dead as early as the year 1639, leaving no issue, she herself surviving till 1662. The poet's granddaughter, Elizabeth Hall, was married in 1626 to Thomas Nash, who died in 1647 without issue; and secondly, in 1649, to John Barnard, afterwards Sir John Barnard, of Abington, county of Northampton, by whom she had no family. Lady Barnard died in 1670, leaving no children, so that with her the lineal descent from Shakspeare expired. There may, however, be descendants from the Shakspeare family still living, deriving their genealogy from Joan, the poet's sister, who married William Hart of Stratford. Joan and her sons are kindly mentioned in the poet's will. The pedigree is not complete, and there is only a descent from the second son, Thomas, to whose son Thomas, with a remainder to his brother George, the birthplace and adjoining premises at Stratford were bequeathed by Lady Barnard in 1669. These continued in the possession of the family for upwards of a century. About fifty years ago the Harts removed to Tewkesbury, where, in 1848, resided Thomas Shakspeare Hart, the eighth in descent from the sister of the great dramatist.' Some years ago we saw these Harts at their house near Tewkesbury. They were very poor. The descendant of Joan Shakspeare was a rush-chair mender. If Mr. Landor pleases to get up subscriptions for the rush-worker, no one can object. Charity might flow into worse channels. Mr. Howitt claims to have discovered another descendant of Joan Shakspeare; but where are the proofs?"—Athenæum, 1857, 822.

We learn, from a volume published in the year in which we write,—Shakespeareana Genealogica, Compiled by G. R. French, Lon., 1869, 8vo,—that George Hart, the ninth in descent from William Hart, who in 1599 married the poet's sister Joan Shakspeare, emigrated to Australia in 1864. The name Shakspeare frequently occurs in the Hart family.

Mr. Southey had set Mr. Landor an example of his loose way of writing:

"The descendants of Shakspeare are living in poverty, and in the lowest condition of life."—Southey's Colloquies, ii. 312.

But let us take a look at Howitt's "descendant of Joan Shakspeare:"

"As I went to Shottry I met with a little incident which interested me greatly by its unexpectedness. As I was about to pass over a stile, at the end of Stratford, into the fields leading to that village, I saw the master of the national school mustering his scholars to their tasks. I stopped, being pleased with the look of the old man, and said, 'You seem to have a considerable number of lads here: shall you raise another Shakspeare from among them, think you?' 'Why,' replied the master, 'I have a Shakspeare now in the school.' I knew that Shakspeare had no descendants beyond the second generation, and I was not aware that there was any of his family remaining. But it seems that the posterity of his sister, Joan Hart, who is mentioned in his will, yet exists; part under her marriage-name of Hart, at Tewkesbury, and a family in Stratford, of the name of Smith.

"'I have a Shakspeare here,' said the master, with evident pride and pleasure. 'Here, boys, here!' He quickly mustered his laddish troop in a row, and said to me, 'There now, sir, can you tell which is a Shakspeare?' I glanced my eye along the line, and, instantly fixing it on one boy, said, 'That is the Shakspeare.' 'You are right,' said the master: 'that is the Shakspeare; the Shakspeare cast of countenance is there. That is William Shakspeare Smith, a lineal descendant of the poet's sister.' . . . It sounded oddly enough, as I was passing along the street in the evening, to hear some of the same school-boys say to one another, 'That is the gentleman who gave Bill Shakspeare sixpence.'"—HOWITT: Visits to Remarkable Places, i. 98–103, and repub., with additions, in his Homes and Haunts, i. See Athen., 1857, 855.

We may refer, in passing, to notices of Shakspeare's residences in Stratford, in Athen., 1857, 501, 1860, ii. 78, 1861, i. 432, 467, 561, ii. 446, 511, 545, 619, 729, 845, 1862, i. 465, ii. 612, 1863, i. 393, Harper's New Mon. Mag., Sept. 1861, Lon. Reader, 1863, i. 257, and Amer. Pub. Circ., 1863, i. 395, (see, also, SHAKSPEARE, JOHN, supra;) of the Stratford Bust, in Athen., 1860, i. 21, 1861, i. 562, 605, and in Wivell's Account, 1827, 8vo; of the Chandos Portrait, (purchased at the Duke of Buckingham's sale at Stowe, Sept. 14, 1848, for 355 guineas, by the Earl of Ellesmere, and by him given to the British National Gallery of Portraits,) in Athen., 1848, 937, 1033, American Pub. Circular, 1858, 274, and in Shakespeare Society Publications, No. 42, (see, also, Cousins's engraving of the Chandos Portrait, folio.) More detailed accounts of these objects of interest to the Shakspeare student will be found in several of the works enumerated in our catalogue of SHAKSPEARIANA, (infra.)

In May, 1838, a copy of Florio's translation of Montaigne's Essays, 1603, fol., with an autograph of "Shakspere," (see Sir F. Madden's Essay, 1838, 8vo, above referred to,) was sold by Evans, of London, for £100; in June, 1858, an autograph signature of Shakspeare affixed to a mortgage-deed of a house in Blackfriars, dated March 11, 1612–13, was bought for the British Museum for £315, (see Athen., 1858, i. 788;) and within the last few years (i.e. on April 23, 1861) New Place, Stratford, was withdrawn from public sale, the price being limited to £1800, after a bid of £1100. Mr. Halliwell considers the property worth not far short of £1500 as an investment. (See Athen., 1861, i. 562.) The Garrick Shakspeare Cup was recently sold for about £50, and has been resold, it is affirmed, for £100. The enthusiasm for all that appertains to the great bard is largely shared in by Americans; yet we are compelled to admit that a reference to the Gazetteer confirms a statement which somewhat surprised us in Mr. Bartlett's Dictionary of Americanisms:

"Distinguished men in English history, as Milton, Addison, Clarendon, Dryden, Scott, Byron, Chesterfield, Hume, Marlborough, Junius, have towns christened with their names. But little fondness is exhibited for dramatic authors, as the name of the greatest of them all has been forgotten: not even a pond, a hollow, or a swamp has been honored with the name of Shakspeare."—Introduc., xxii.

The large sale of the poet's works in the United States, however, is perhaps a more honourable tribute to his genius than the adoption of his name for a village. But, now that Mr. Bartlett has called attention to this omission, we predict that it will soon be supplied. We now proceed to notice—

I. EDITIONS OF SHAKSPEARE'S WORKS.
II. CRITICAL OPINIONS ON SHAKSPEARE'S WORKS.
III. SHAKSPEARIANA.

It is not, of course, intended to specify all of the EDITIONS, to cite all the CRITICAL OPINIONS, or to chronicle all of the SHAKSPEARIANA. For so extensive an exhibition neither our time nor our limits would suffice. In each of the divisions, where no place of publication is designated, London will be understood. P. p., or p. p., signifies privately printed; s. a., sine anno; s. l., sine loco; f. p., fine paper; t. p., thick paper; l. p., large paper. Titles will be abbreviated as convenience may suggest. We shall avail ourselves of the labours of our predecessors—Lowndes, Wilson, Halliwell, H. G. Bohn, (Lowndes's Bibl. Man., Pt. 8, 1863,) and others—as we may deem expedient; but we shall also add much new matter not before collected.

I. EDITIONS OF SHAKSPEARE'S WORKS.

POEMS.

VENUS AND ADONIS: 1. Lon., 1593, 4to. A copy, thought to be unique, is in the Malone Collection, Bodleian Library; cost Malone £25. Reproduced in fac-simile, by E. W. Ashbee, for J. O. COLLECTED POEMS: 1. The Passionate Pilgrim, &c., some not S.'s, 1599, 16mo. Mr. J. P. Collier's last recorded opinion (see Lon. Athen., May 17, and Notes and Queries, July 5, 1856, and his Bibl. Account of Early English Lit., 1865, art. Barnfield, Richard) is that As it Fell upon a Day, If Music and Sweet Poetry Agree, and Whilst as Fickle Fortune Smiled, which appear in this volume, are really Shakspeare's, and not Barnfield's. Mr. Knight, in his Pictorial Shakspere, edition 1867, vi. 507, decides that the sonnet commencing If Music and Sweet Poetry Agree is Barnfield's. 3d ed., 1612, 16mo. 2. With portrait, Poems, 1640, 12mo. Sold in 1864 for £20, and in 1865 for £17 10*s.*; G. Daniel, £44. Chiefly translations not S.'s: see No. 1. With Glossarial Notes by A. J. Valpy, Lon., 1862, fp. 8vo. The Poems are also printed with some of the editions of the Plays, (infra.)

"About the excellence of these poems there can be no dispute. Next to the dramas they are by far the most valuable of his works. They contain such a quantity of profound thought as must astonish every reflecting reader; they are adorned by splendid and delicate imagery; they are sublime, pathetic, tender, or sweetly playful; while they delight the ear by their fluency and their varied harmonies of rhythm. Our language can boast no sonnets altogether worthy of being placed by the side of Shakspeare's, except the few which Milton poured forth, so severe and so majestic."—REV. A. DYCE: Life of Shakspeare.

"Scorn not the Sonnet: critic, you have frowned
Mindless of its just honours. With this key Shakspeare unlocked his heart."—WORDSWORTH.

"There is extant a small volume of miscellaneous poems in which Shakspeare expresses his feelings in his own person. It is not difficult to conceive that the editor, George Steevens, should have been insensible to the beauties of one portion of that volume, the Sonnets; though there is not a part of the writings of this poet where is found, in an equal compass, a greater number of exquisite feelings felicitously expressed. But, from regard to the critic's own credit, he would not have ventured to talk of an Act of Parliament not being strong enough to compel the perusal of these, or any production of Shakspeare, if he had not known that the people of England were ignorant of the treasures contained in those little pieces."—WORDSWORTH: Pref. to Poetical Works.

"Notwithstanding the frequent beauties of these sonnets, ... it is impossible not to wish that Shakspeare had not written them."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, Part III. chap. v., (q. v.)

SONNETS: 1. Shake-speare's Sonnets. Never before Imprinted, 1609, 4to. Steevens, 1359, £3 19*s.*; Chalmers, 1842, £105, (bought for the Earl of Ellesmere;) Varel copy sold at auction in England, about 1857, £150; G. Daniel, Dec. 1864, 1456, £225 15*s.* This copy cost Narcissus Luttrell one shilling. Reproduced in Fac-Simile by the New Process of Photo-Zincography, (under the direction of Col. Sir Henry James, at Southampton,) from the Original in the Possession of the Earl of Ellesmere, 1862, sm. 4to, 10*s.* 6*d.* 2. 1599, 12mo. 3. Victor Hugo, 1857, 12mo. 18. In French, Les Sonnets, par L. de Wailly: Revue des Deux Mondes, 3me série, tome iv. Translations of the Poems are also contained in the editions of Œuvres Complètes. See A Key to Shakespeare's Sonnets, by D. Barnstorff, [Bremen, 1861;] Translated from the German by T. J. Graham, Lon., 1862, p. 8vo. Herr B. supposes "W. H." to signify William Himself, which gives to the expostulations, adjurations, &c. rather a curious aspect. See Lon. Athen., 1861, i. 726, 1862, ii. 137, and 1862, i. 117, (see, also, 155, and year 1857,) for a letter on the mysterious W. H., from M. Philarète Chasles, with which compare The Sonnets of William Shakespeare: a Critical Disquisition suggested by a Recent Discovery, by Bolton Corney, 1862, 8vo, pp. 16: privately printed. M. Chasles promises a work in English, French, and German, (London, Paris, Berlin,) which will probably be entitled Shakespeare, Southampton, and Pembroke. See Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1864, Art. v., (Shakspeare and his Sonnets.)

The Sonnets were reprinted with Twenty of the Plays of Shakespeare, by George Steevens, 1766, 4 vols. 8vo, and are appended to some of the later editions of the Plays, (infra.)

Daniel, July, 1864, 1416, one of the finest copies known, "The Daniel Moore copy," Russia by Baumgarten, £716 2s., (bought for Miss Burdett Coutts.) Highest price ever paid. XXXVII. Earl of Charlemont, Aug. 1865, 132, 12⅝ by 8 5-16, one of the finest copies known, old red morocco, tooled borders, £455. Mr. Halliwell purchased a copy at auction in Sept. 1867, for £410; B. Quaritch offered in his General Catalogue, 1868, 12,714, a slightly imperfect copy for £345; and in his Catalogue, No. 253, 1869, the Duke of Roxburghe's copy, "quite perfect," for £165. Thomas Beet offers in his Catalogue, Part 33, 1869, a copy, imperfect, for £350.

Rev., 3d Ser., i. 91; Description of a Copy of the First Folio Edition of the Plays of Shakespeare, now in the Collection of T. P. Barton, N. York, 1860, 4to, l. p., pp. 22: 20 copies p. p.: Shakespeare's Plays in Folio, (in the library of James Lenox, Esq., the author of the account:) Appendix to Hist. Mag., July, 1861, pp. 1–5.

"The first edition is the only one, in my opinion, worth regarding; and it is much to be wished that an edition of Shakspeare were given literatim according to the first folio; for by the presumptuous license of the dwarfish commentators, who are forever cutting him down to their own size, we risk the loss of Shakspeare's genuine text, which that folio assuredly contains."—J. HORNE TOOKE: Diversions of Purley.

"It is by courtesy alone that this folio can be termed an edition. Edited, in any proper sense of the word, it is not. The errors of the printer, and the corruptions of the players, are put down to Shakspeare's account; nor is there probably any Latin or Greek manuscript more vitiated by sleepy and ignorant copyists than this editio princeps has been by its publishers. . . . And this negligence is the more inexcusable and provoking because, according to general tradition, Shakspeare's autographs were models of calligraphy, and Heninge and Condell must have seen, and might therefore have printed from, them. . . . Bad as the editing was, the printing of this volume was no better. Verse is printed as prose, prose as verse. Priscian's head is perpetually broken; words are omitted or transposed; the punctuation is such that had Dogberry and Verges turned compositors for the nonce, they could hardly have made it worse. Nor was advantage taken of a second edition to amend these gross, open, and palpable errors. Some glaring blunders are corrected in the second folio; but new blunders compensate for those which are removed."—Bentley's Lon. Quarterly, No. III. See, also, Cornhill Mag., Oct. 1867.

Roxburghe, 3798, proofs and 98 (all that were taken) etchings, Rus., £81; Stowe, proofs before letters, mor., £42 10*s.*; Hanrott, 2737, proofs, 2 vols., green mor., £40; Stowe, proofs before letters, and 98 etchings, Miss Boydell's copy, £42 10*s.* For an account of Lady Lucan's illustrated copy, see Dibdin's Bibliomania, ed. 1842, 498, n. In 1804, the year of his death, Boydell estimated his expenditures on these great works at £350,000, which ruined him. In 1777 he published the Liber Veritatis, fol.; in 1794, the History of the River Thames, 2 vols. fol.; and in 1803, an Alphabetical Catalogue of Plates Engraved by the First Artists, &c., 4to. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1804, 1805; Knight's Eng. Cyc., Biog., i. 1856, 878.

Mr. Tassie was more fortunate: he drew the Boydell Gallery with a guinea lottery-ticket, and profited by it, it is said, to the extent of more than £10,000. Dr. Spooner, of the city of New York, only a few years since restored the plates, and reissued engravings, 100 in number, at $1 each. See SPOONER, SHEARJASHUB, M.D.

II. CRITICAL OPINIONS ON SHAKSPEARE'S WORKS.

But where shall we begin the harvest? for the field is vast, the fruit abundant, the garner small,—and we cannot, like the rich man in the parable, "pull down our barns and build greater."

The abundance of modern commentaries on the great ward will not justify us in neglecting the earlier discerners of his merits,—including, as these do, some of the foremost names in the English Republic of Letters.

The following lines, published in Shakspeare's twenty-eighth year, form part of a lamentation over the perversion of public taste:

"And he, the man whom Nature selfe had made
To mock herselfe, and Truth to imitate,
With kindly counter under mimic shade,
Our pleasant Willy, ah! is dead of late:
With whom all joy and jolly meriment
Is also deaded and in dolour drent."

EDMUND SPENSER: The Teares of the Muses: Complaints, 1591, 4to. See, also, his Colin Clout's Come Home Againe, 1595, 4to.

It has been doubted—with good reason, we think—that the lines just quoted were intended for Shakspeare: but see Collier's Life of the poet, 1844; Knight's William Shakspere: a Biography, ed. 1843, and ed. 1851, 207–8; and his Pictorial Shakspere, ed. 1867, viii. 350–52; and Staunton's Shakespeare, Life, xxvii.

Robert Greene warns his fellow-bards against the ingratitude and selfishness of players:

"Trust them not," he exclaims: "there is an upstart Crowe beautified with our Feathers, that with his Tygres heart, wrapt in a Player's hyde, supposes he is as well able to bombaste out a Blanke Verse, as the best of you: and being an absolute Johannes fac-totum is, in his own conceyt, the onely Shake-scene in a Countrey."—Groatsworth of Witte bought with a Million of Repentance, 1592, 4to. Published by Henry Chettle: see his Kinde Hart's Dreame, (1593,) 4to; address To the Gentleman Readers.

"As the soule of Euphorbus was thought to line in Pythagoras: so the sweete wittie soule of Ouid lives in mellifluous and honytongued Shakespeare, witnes his Venus and Adonis, his Lucrece, his sugred Sonnets among his priuate friends. . . . As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for Comedy and Tragedy among the Latines: so Shakespeare among ye English is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage; for Comedy witnes his Gētlemē of Verona, his Errors, his Loue labors lost, his Loue labours wonne, his Midsummers night dreame, & his Merchant of Venice: for Tragedy, his Richard the 2, Richard the 3, Henry the 4, King Iohn, Titus Andronicus and his Romeo and Juliet.

"As Epius Stolo said, the Muses would speak with Plautus tonge, if they would speak Latin: so I say the Muses would speak with Shakespeare's fine filed phrase, if they would speak English."—FRANCIS MERES: Wits Treasury, being the second part of Wits Commonwealth, 1598, 12mo.

"And Shakespeare, thou whose hony-flowing vaine
(Pleasing the world) thy praises doth obtaine,
Whose Venus and whose Lucrece (sweete and chaste)
Thy name in fame's immortal booke have plac't,
Liue ever you; at least, in fame liue ever!
Well may the bodye die, but fame dies never."

RICHARD BARNEFEILD: Poems in Divers Humors, pub. with Encomion of Lady Pecunia, &c., 1598, 4to.

"Like friendly Shakespere's tragedies, where the comedian rides while the tragedian stands on tiptoe: faith it should please all, like Prince Hamlet; but in sadnesse then it would be feared he would runne mad."—ANTHONY SCOLOKER: Daiphantus, 1604, 4to.

TO OUR ENGLISH TERENCE, MR. WILLIAM SHAKE-SPERE:

"Some say, good Will, which I in sport do sing,
Hadst thou not plaid some Kingly parts in sport,
Thou hadst been a companion for a King,
And beene King among the meaner sort.

Some others raile; but raile as they think fit,
Thou hast no rayling, but a raigning wit:
And honestly thou sow'st, which they do reape,
So to increase their stocke, which they do keepe."

AN EPITAPH ON THE ADMIRABLE DRAMATICKE POET, SHAKESPEARE.

"What needs my Shakespeare for his honour'd bones,
The labour of an Age in piled stones,
Or that his hallow'd Reliques should be hid
Under a star-ypointing pyramid?
Dear Sonne of Memory, great Heire of Fame,
What need'st thou such weak witnes of thy Name?
Thou in our wonder and astonishment
Hast built thyselfe a lasting Monument:
For whilst, to th' shame of slow-endevouring Art,
Thy easie numbers flow, and that each part [heart]
Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued Booke,
Those Delphicke Lines with deep Impression tooke;
Then thou, our fancy of herself bereaving,
Dost make us Marble with too much conceiving;
And so Sepulcher'd, in such pompe dost lie,
That Kings for such a Tombe would wish to die."

JOHN MILTON, 1630, (ætat. 24: the first of his pieces that appeared in print:) prefixed to the Second Folio of Shakespeare's Plays, 1632. See Lon. Athen., 1863, i. 222.

"Or sweetest Shakespeare, fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild."

JOHN MILTON: L'Allegro.

As the sketch of Shakspeare in the Theatrum Poetarum Anglicanorum (1675) of Edward Phillips is ascribed to his illustrious uncle, (see our Life of John Milton, p. 1298, supra,) it should not be omitted in this place:

"William Shakespeare, the glory of the English stage, whose nativity at Stratford-upon-Avon, is the highest honour that town can boast of: from an actor of tragedies and comedies he became a maker; and such a maker, that though some others may perhaps pretend to a more exact decorum and œconomie, especially in tragedy, never any expressed a more lofty and tragic height; never any represented nature more purely to the life; and where the polishments of art are most wanting, as probably his learning was not extraordinary, he pleaseth with a certain wild and native elegance; and in all his writings hath an unvulgar style, as well in his Venus and Adonis, his Rape of Lucrece, and other various poems, as in his dramatics."

"You, Swans of Avon, change your fates, and all
Sing, and then die at Drayton's funeral!
Sure shortly there will not a drop be seen,
And the smooth-pebbled bottom be turned green,
When the Nymphs that inhabit it, have,
As they did Shakespeare, weep to thy grave."

SIR ASTON COKAIN: On Drayton's Death, 1631.

In his Præludium to Browne's Plays, Sir Aston remarks,

"Judicious Beaumont, and th' ingenious soul
Of Fletcher too, may move without controul,

Shakespeare (most rich in humours) entertain
The crowded theatres with his happy vein."
See Cokain's Poems, &c., 1658, sm. 8vo.

"Mellifluous Shakespeare, whose enchanting quill Commanded Mirth or Passion, was but Will."

TWO EPIGRAMMES ON SHAKESPEARE:

'118. Thy Muses, sugred dainties seem to us
Like the fam'd Apples of old Tantalus;—
For we (admiring) see and heare thy straines,
But none I see or heare, those sweets attaines.
119. Thou hast so us'd thy Pen (or shooke thy speare)
That poets startle, nor thy wit come neare."
THOMAS BANCROFT:

"TO THE READER.
This Figure, that thou here seest put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut;
Wherein the Grauer had a strife
With Nature, to out-doo the life:
O, could he but haue drawne his wit
As well in brasse, as he hath hit
His face; the Print would then surpasse
All, that was euer writ in brasse.
But, since he cannot, Reader, looke
Not on his Picture, but his Booke.—B. I."
BEN JONSON: Lines on Martin Droeshout's Portrait of Shakespeare in the First Folio, 1623. They are also found, with variations in orthography, typography, &c., in the Second, (1632,) Third, (1664,) and Fourth (1685) Folios.

We must quote a few lines from other eulogies by Ben Jonson:

"To the memory of my beloued,
The AVTHOR
Mr. WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE: AND
To draw no enuy (Shakespeare) on thy name,
Am I thus ample to thy Booke, and Fame:
While I confesse thy writings to be such,
As neither Man, nor Muse, can praise too much.
'Tis true, and all men's suffrage. * * *
* * * * * Soule of the Age!
The applause! delight! the wonder of our Stage!
My Shakespeare, rise; I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lye
A little further, to make thee a roome:
Thou art a Moniment, without a tombe,
And art aliue still, while thy Booke doth liue,
And we haue wits to read, and praise to giue.
* * * * * * * * * *
Triumph, my Britaine, thou hast one to showe,
To whom all Scenes of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time!
And all the Muses still were in their prime,
When, like Apollo, he came forth to warme
Our eares, or, like a Mercury, to charme!
Nature her selfe was proud of his designes,
And ioy'd to weare the dressing of his lines!
Which were so richly spun, and wouen so fit,
As, since, she will vouchsafe no other Wit.

Sweet Swan of Avon! what a sight it were,
To see thee in our waters yet appeare,
And make those flights upon the bankes of Thames
That so did take Eliza, and our Iames.
But stay! I see thee in the Hemisphere
Aduanc'd, and made a Constellation there!
Shine forth, thou Starre of Poets, and with rage,
Or influence, chide, or cheere the drooping Stage;
Which, since thy flight frō hence, hath mourn'd like night,
And despaires day, but for thy Volume's light."
From the First Folio, 1623: an exact copy.

Nor must the prose portrait in Jonson's Discoveries, in which, now approaching the grave, he refers so affectionately to the friend of his youthful days, be forgotten:

"I remember the players have often mentioned it as an honour to Shakespeare that in his writing (whatsoever he penned) he never blotted out a line. My answer hath been, 'Would he had blotted a thousand!' which they thought a malevolent speech. I had not told posterity this, but for their ignorance who chose that circumstance to commend their friend by wherein he most faulted, and to justify mine own candour: for I loved the man, and do honour his memory, on this side idolatry, as much as any. He was indeed honest, and of an open and free nature; had an excellent phantasy, brave notions, and gentle expressions, wherein he flowed with that facility that sometimes it was necessary he should be stopped:

"'Sufflaminandus erat,' as Augustus said of Haterius. His wit was in his own power; would the rule of it had been so too! Many times he fell into those things could not escape laughter; as when he said, in the person of Cæsar, one speaking to him, 'Cæsar, that dost me wrong!' he replied, 'Cæsar did never wrong but with just cause;' and such like—which were ridiculous. But he redeemed his vices with his virtues. There was ever more in him to be praised than to be pardoned."—Ben Jonson's Discoveries; probably written about 1635.

In a conversation between Sir J. Suckling, Sir W. Davenant, Ben Jonson, and some others, the ever-memorable John Hales is reported to have said that "If Shakspeare had not read the Antients he had not stolen from them; and if he [Jonson] would produce any one topick finely treated by any one of them, he [Hales] would undertake to shew something upon the same subject, at least as well written, by Shakspeare."

Comparisons between Shakspeare and Ben Jonson will be found in our Life of the latter, p. 998, supra.

That the "flights of the Sweet Swan of Avon" charmed the "Elizas" of humble life, we have early evidence. In his enumeration of English poets, Master John Johnson thus discourses of our author:

"There was also Shakespeere, who (as Cupid informed me) creeps into the women's closets about bed-time, and if it were not for some of the old out-of-date grandames (who are set over the rest as their tutoresses) the young sparkish girles would read in Shakespeere day and night," &c.—The Academy of Love, describing the Folly of Younge Men and the Fallacy of Women, 1641, 4to.

Aubrey was not born until nine years after Shakspeare's death; but he talked with the acquaintances of the poet, (see AUBREY, JOHN, p. 82, supra,) and left us some of the results of his investigations:

"This William, being inclined naturally to poetry and acting, came to London, I guess, about 18, and was an actor at one of the play-houses, and did act exceedingly well. (Now, B. Jonson was never a good actor, but an excellent instructor.) He began early to make essays at dramatic poetry, which at that time was very low; and his plays took well. He was a handsome, well-shaped man, very good company, and of a very ready and pleasant smooth wit. The humour of a constable in 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' he happened to take at Grendon, in Bucks, which is the road from London to Stratford; and there was living that constable about 1642, when I first came to Oxon. Mr. Jos. Howe is of that parish, and knew him. Ben Jonson and he did gather humours of men daily wherever they came. . . . He was wont to go to his native country once a year. I think I have been told that he left £200 or £300 per annum, there and thereabout, to a sister. I have heard Sir William Davenant and Mr. Thomas Shadwell—who is accounted the best comedian we have now—say that he had a most prodigious wit, and did admire his natural parts beyond all other dramatical writers. He was wont to say that he never blotted out a line in his life. Said Ben Jonson, 'I wish he had blotted out a thousand.'"—Written about 1670: Letters by Eminent Persons, &c., (1813, 3 vols. 8vo,) iii. 307.

So much for the earlier notices of Shakspeare: we descend to later times.

"Shakespear, who, taught by none, did first impart
To Fletcher wit, to lab'ring Johnson art.
He, monarch-like, gave there his subjects law,
And is that nature which they paint and draw;
Fletcher reached that, which on his heights did grow,
While Johnson crept, and gathered all below:
This did his love, and this his mirth digest,
One imitates him most, the other best.
If they have since outwrit all other men,
'Tis from the drops which fell from Shakspear's pen.
The storm which vanished on the neighb'ring shore
Was taught by Shakespear's Tempest first to roar
That innocence and beauty which did smile
In Fletcher, grew in this Inchanted Isle.
But Shakespear's magic could not copied be,
Within that circle none durst walk but he."
JOHN DRYDEN: Prologue to the Tempest, altered, 1670.

"Shakespeare, thy gift, I place before my sight;
With awe I ask his blessing ere I write;
With reverence look on his majestic face,
Proud to be less, but of his godlike race.
His soul inspires me while thy praise I write,
And I like Teucer under Ajax fight:
Bids thee through me be bold; with dauntless breast
Contemn the bad and emulate the best.
Like his, thy critics in th' attempt are lost;
When most they rail, know then they envy most."
JOHN DRYDEN: Epist. to Sir Godfrey Kneller.

"In him we find all arts and sciences, all moral and natural philosophy, without knowing that he ever studied them."—JOHN DRYDEN.

"To begin, then, with Shakespear. He was the man, who, of all modern, and perhaps ancient poets, had the largest and most comprehensive soul: all the images of nature were still present to him, and he drew them, not laboriously, but luckily: when he describes any thing, you more than see it—you feel it, too. Those who accuse him to have wanted learning, give him the greater commendation: he was naturally learned; he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature,—he looked inwards and found her there. I cannot say he is everywhere alike: were he so, I should do him injury to compare him with the greatest of mankind. He is many times flat and insipid, his comic wit degenerating into clenches, his serious swelling into bombast. But he is always great when some great occasion is presented to him; no man can say he ever had a fit subject for his wit, and did not then raise himself as high above the rest of poets,

'Quantùm lenta solent inter viburna cupressi.'

The consideration of this made Mr. Hales, of Eton, say that there was no subject of which any poet ever writ, but he would produce it much better done in Shakespear: and, however others are now generally preferred before him, yet the age wherein he lived, which had contemporaries with him Fletcher and Jonson, never equalled them to him in their esteem; and in the last King's court, when Ben's reputation was at highest, Sir John Suckling, and with him the greater part of the courtiers, set our Shakespeare far above him."—JOHN DRYDEN: Essay on Dramatick Poetry. See, also, Notes and Queries, 1854, i. 95.

This critique elicited the enthusiastic eulogy of a stern censor with whom enthusiasm was rare:

"The account of Shakespeare may stand as a perpetual model of encomiastic criticism; exact without minuteness, and lofty without exaggeration. The praise lavished by Longinus on the attestation of the heroes of Marathon by Demosthenes, fades away before it. In a few lines is exhibited a character so extensive in its comprehension and so curious in its limitations, that nothing can be added, diminished, or reformed: nor can the editors and admirers of Shakespeare, in all their emulation of reverence, boast of much more than of having diffused and paraphrased his epitome of excellence; of having changed Dryden's gold for baser metal, of lower value though of greater bulk."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Dryden.

> "Not but the tragic spirit was our own,
> And full in Shakespeare, fair in Otway, shone:
> But Otway fail'd to polish or refine,
> And fluent Shakespeare scarce effaced a line."
> POPE: Imit. of Horace, book ii., Epist. i.

"If ever any author deserved the name of an original, it was Shakespeare. Homer himself drew not his art so immediately from the fountains of nature: it proceeded through Egyptian strainers and channels, and came to him not without some tincture of the learning, or some cast of the models, of those before him. The poetry of Shakespeare was inspiration indeed: he is not so much an imitator as an instrument of Nature; and it is not so just to say that he speaks from her, as that she speaks through him.

"His characters are so much nature herself, that it is a sort of injury to call them by so distant a name as copies of her. Those of other poets have a constant resemblance, which shows that they received them from one another and were but multipliers of the same image; each picture, like a mock rainbow, is but the reflection of a reflection. But every single character in Shakespeare is as much an individual as those in life itself; it is as impossible to find any two alike; and such as from their relation or affinity in any respect appear most to be twins, will, upon comparison, be found remarkably distinct. To this life and variety of character we must add the wonderful preservation of it; which is such throughout his plays, that had all the speeches been printed without the very names of the persons, I believe one might have applied them with certainty to every speaker.

"The power over our passions was never possessed in a more eminent degree, or displayed in so different instances. Yet, all along, there is seen no labour, no pains to raise them; no preparation to guide or guess to the effect, or be perceived to lead towards it; but the heart swells, and the tears burst out, just at the proper places: we are surprised at the moment we weep; and yet, upon reflection, find the passion so just that we should be surprised if we had not wept, and wept at that very moment.

"How astonishing is it, again, that the passions directly opposite to these, laughter and spleen, are no less at his command! that he is not more a master of the great than the ridiculous in human nature; of our noblest tendernesses than of our vainest foibles; of our strongest emotions, than of our idlest sensations! Nor does he only excel in the passions; in the coolness of reflection and reasoning he is full as admirable. His sentiments are not only in general the most pertinent and judicious upon every subject; but by a talent very peculiar, something between penetration and felicity, he hits upon that particular point on which the bent of each argument turns, or the force of each motive depends. This is perfectly amazing, from a man of no education or experience in those great and public scenes of life which are usually the subject of his thoughts; so that he seems to have known the world by intuition, to have looked through human nature at one glance, and to be the only author that gives ground for a very new opinion, that the philosopher, and even the man of the world, may be born, as well as the poet. It must be owned, that, with all these great excellences, he has almost as great defects; and that as he has certainly written better, so he has perhaps written worse, than any other."—ALEX. POPE: Pref. to his ed. of Shakspeare, 1725, (q. v.: and compare his remarks on Shakspeare's learning with Dr. Richard Farmer's Essay on the Learning of Shakspeare, 1766, 8vo.) See, also, Blackw. Mag., lvii. 148, 383, 385.

"I felt that here Shakespeare breathed in his inspiration; here he watched the wild flowers, and learned to embroider his poetry with their amaranthine colours. I fancied I felt whence his poetry was drawn, and recalled Gray's lines on Shakespeare with a clear perception of the fitness of every epithet:

> "'In thy green lap was Nature's darling laid,
> What time, where lucid Avon strayed,
> To him the mighty mother did unveil
> Her awful face: the dauntless child
> Stretched forth his little hand, and smiled.
> "This pencil take," she said, "whose colours clear
> Richly paint the vernal year:
> Thine, too, these golden keys, immortal boy!
> This can unlock the gates of Joy,
> Of Horror that, and thrilling Fears,
> Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic Tears."'"

"Shakespeare is, above all writers, at least above all modern writers, the poet of nature; the poet that holds up to his readers a faithful mirrour of manners and of life. His characters are not modified by the customs of particular places, unpractised by the rest of the world, by the peculiarities of studies or professions, which can operate but upon small numbers, or by the accidents of transient fashions or temporary opinions: they are the genuine progeny of common humanity, such as the world will always supply and observation will always find. His persons act and speak by the influence of those general passions and principles by which all minds are agitated and the whole system of life is continued in motion. In the writings of other poets a character is too often an individual; in those of Shakespeare it is commonly a species.

"It is from this wide extension of design that so much instruction is derived. It is this which fills the plays of Shakespeare with practical axioms and domestic wisdom. It was said of Euripides that every verse was a precept; and it may be said of Shakespeare that from his works may be collected a system of civil and œconomical prudence. Yet his real power is not shewn in the splendour of particular passages, but by the progress of his fable and the tenour of his dialogue; and he that tries to recommend him by select quotations will succeed like the pedant in Hierocles, who, when he offered his house to sale, carried a brick in his pocket as a specimen.

"It will not easily be imagined how much Shakespeare excels in accommodating his sentiments to real life, but by comparing him with other authors. It was observed of the ancient schools of declamation that the more diligently they were frequented the more was the student disqualified for the world, because he found nothing there which he should ever meet in any other place. The same remark may be applied to every stage but that of Shakespeare. The theatre, when it is under any other direction, is peopled by such characters as were never seen, conversing in a language which was never heard, upon topicks which will never arise in the commerce of mankind. But the dialogue of this author is often so evidently determined by the incident which produces it, and is pursued with so much ease and simplicity, that it seems scarcely to claim the merit of fiction, but to have been gleaned, by diligent selection, out of common conversation and common occurrences.

"Upon every other stage the universal agent is love, by whose power all good and evil is distributed, and every action quickened or retarded. To bring a lover, a lady, and a rival into the fable; to entangle them in contradictory obligations, perplex them with oppositions of interest, and harass them with violences of desires inconsistent with each other; to make them meet in rapture and part in agony; to fill their mouths with hyperbolical joy and outrageous sorrow; to distress them as nothing human ever was distressed; to deliver them as nothing human ever was delivered; is the business of a modern dramatist. For this, probability is violated, life is misrepresented, and language is depraved. But love is only one of many passions, and, as it has no great influence upon the sum of life, it has little operation in the dramas of a poet who caught his ideas from the living world, and exhibited only what he saw before him. He knew that any other passion as it was regular or exorbitant was a cause of happiness or calamity.

"Characters thus ample and general were not easily discriminated and preserved; yet perhaps no poet ever kept his personages more distinct from each other. I will not say, with Pope, that every speech may be assigned to the proper speaker, because many speeches there are which have nothing characteristical; but perhaps, though some may be equally assigned to every person, it will be difficult to find any that can be properly transferred from the present possessor to another claimant. The choice is right when there is reason for choice.

"Other dramatists can only gain attention by hyperbolical or exaggerated characters, by fabulous and unexampled excellence or depravity, as the writers of barbarous romances invigorated the reader by a giant and a dwarf; and he that should form his expectations of human affairs from the play or from the tale would be equally deceived. Shakespeare has no heroes; his scenes are occupied only by men, who act and speak as the reader thinks he should himself have spoken or acted on the same occasion. Even where the agency is supernatural, the dialogue is level with life. Other writers disguise the most natural passions and most frequent incidents, so that he who contemplates them in the book will not know them in the world. Shakespeare approximates the remote, and familiarizes the wonderful; the event which he represents will not happen, but, if it were possible, its effects would probably be such as he has assigned; and it may be said that he has not only shown human nature as it acts in real exigencies, but as it would be found in trials to which it cannot be exposed.

"This therefore is the praise of Shakespeare, that his drama is the mirrour of life; that he who has mazed his imagination in following the phantoms which other writers raise up before him, may be cured of his delirious extasies, by reading human sentiments in human language, by scenes from which a hermit may estimate the transactions of the world, and a confessor predict the progress of the passions. . . . As his personages act upon principles arising from genuine passion, very little modified by particular forms, their pleasures and vexations are communicable to all times and to all places; they are natural, and therefore durable. The adventitious peculiarities of personal habits are only superficial dyes, bright and pleasing for a little while, yet soon fading to a dim tinct, without any remains of former lustre; but the discriminations of true passion are the colours of nature; they pervade the whole mass, and can only perish with the body that exhibits them. The accidental compositions of heterogeneous modes are dissolved by the chance which combined them; but the uniform simplicity of primitive qualities neither admits increase nor suffers decay. The sand heaped by one flood is scattered by another; but the rock always continues in its place. The stream of time, which is continually washing the dissoluble fabrics of other poets, passes without injury by the adamant of Shakespeare."—Dr. Samuel Johnson: Preface to his ed. of Shakspeare, 1765.

The Doctor, however, expresses his opinion that the poet has faults "sufficient to obscure and overwhelm any other merit," and remarks that, whilst "he has scenes of undoubted and perpetual excellence," he has not perhaps "one play which, if it were now exhibited as the work of a contemporary writer, would be heard to the conclusion." But the reader must read the whole of this Preface, and, assenting or dissenting, he will wish it longer; and if he then proceed to the Notes he will probably wish them fewer. We have, however, already considered the Doctor's abilities as a Shakspearian commentator, (Johnson, Samuel, p. 976, supra.)

In conversation the gruff dictator went so far as to declare that

"Shakespeare never has six lines together without a fault. Perhaps you may find seven; but this does not refute my general assertion."—Croker's Boswell's Johnson, chap. xxii. See, also, the Index to this work, ed. 1848.

The extracts last cited have not put the Shakspeare devotee in the best possible humour for weighing the verdict of David Hume, which follows; but, like Shakspeare, (according to Johnson,) at least in this, we have "no heroes" in this book,—no name too great for juxtaposition with honest (even if erring) censure. It is perhaps some evidence of our honesty that on these pages we continually record judgments against which our own critical convictions earnestly protest.

"Dr. [Edward] Young observed to me that Shakspeare's style, where the hearts and manners of men was the subject, is always good; his bad lines, generally, where they are not concerned.—1758."—Spence: Spence's Anec., Sect. iv., n.

"Among the English [who have introduced fairies, witches, &c.] Shakespeare has incomparably excelled all others. That noble extravagance of fancy which he had in so great perfection thoroughly qualified him to touch this weak, superstitious part of his reader's imagination, and made him capable of succeeding where he had nothing to support him besides the strength of his own genius. There is something so wild, and yet so solemn, in the speeches of his ghosts, fairies, witches, and the like imaginary persons, that we cannot forbear thinking them natural, though we have no rule by which to judge of them, and must confess, if there are such beings in the world, it looks highly probable they should talk and act as he has represented them."—Addison: Spectator, No. 419, July 1, 1712.

"If Shakespeare be considered as a Man," remarks a famous historian, "born in a rude age and educated in the lowest manner, without any instruction, either from the world or from books, he may be regarded as a prodigy: if represented as a Poet capable of furnishing a proper entertainment to a refined or intelligent audience, we must abate much of this eulogy. In his compositions, we regret that many irregularities, and even absurdities, should so frequently disfigure the animated and passionate scenes intermixed with them; and at the same time we perhaps admire the more those beauties on account of their being surrounded with such deformities. A striking peculiarity of sentiment, adapted to a single character, he frequently hits as it were by inspiration; but a reasonable propriety of thought he cannot for any time uphold. Nervous and picturesque expressions as well as descriptions abound in him; but it is in vain we look either for purity or simplicity of diction. His total ignorance of all theatrical art and conduct, however material a defect, yet, as it affects the spectator rather than the reader, we can more easily excuse than that want of taste which often prevails in his productions, and which gives way only by intervals to the irradiations of genius. A great and fertile genius he certainly possessed, and one enriched equally with a tragic and comic vein; but he ought to be cited as a proof how dangerous it is to rely on these advantages alone for attaining an excellence in the finer arts. And there may even remain a suspicion that we overrate, if possible, the greatness of his genius, in the same manner as bodies often appear more gigantic on account of their being disproportioned and misshapen."—David Hume: Hist. of Eng., Reign of James I., chap. xlix., Appendix.

A later critic, and one much more at home in this department of letters, thinks very differently:

"The English stage might be considered equally without rule and without model when Shakspeare arose. The effect of the genius of an individual upon the taste of a nation is mighty; but that genius, in its turn, is formed according to the notions prevalent at the period when it comes into existence. Such was the case with Shakspeare. Had he received an education more extensive, and possessed a taste refined by the classical models, it is probable that he also, in admiration of the ancient Drama, might have mistaken the form for the essence, and subscribed to those rules which had produced such masterpieces of art. Fortunately for the full exertion of a genius as comprehensive and versatile as intense and powerful, Shakspeare had no access to any models of which the commanding merit might have controlled and limited his own exertions. He followed the path which a nameless crowd of obscure writers had trodden before him; but he moved in it with the grace and majestic step of a being of a superior order, and vindicated forever the British theatre from a pedantic restriction to classical rule. Nothing went before Shakspeare which in any respect was fit to fix and stamp the character of a national Drama; and certainly no one will succeed him capable of establishing, by mere authority, a form more restricted than that which Shakspeare used."—Sir Walter Scott: Essay on the Drama, in Encyc. Brit., and in his Prose Works.

"Shakespeare, whose tragic scenes are sometimes so wonderfully forcible and expressive, is a very indifferent poet when he attempts to rhyme."—Hume: Hist. of Eng., ch. lxii.: The Commonwealth.

"Shakspeare, . . . that first genius of the world. . . . I hold a perfect comedy to be the perfection of human composition; and I firmly believe that fifty Iliads and Æneids could be written sooner than such a character as Falstaff's. . . . Annibal Caracci himself could not paint like our Raphael poet! . . . Was Raphael himself as great a genius in his art as the author of 'Macbeth'? . . . Milton and Shakspeare, the only two mortals I am acquainted with who ventured beyond the visible diurnal sphere and preserved their intellects. . . . Shakspeare, who was superior to all mankind, wrote some whole plays that are as bad as any of our present writers [1778]."—Horace Walpole, 1776–1790: Letters, ed. 1861, vi. 394, 395, vii. 135, 373, viii. 160, (see, also, 533,) ix. 254.

"I cannot account for Shakspeare's low estimate of his own writings, except from the sublimity, the super-humanity of his genius. They were infinitely below his conception of what they might have been and ought to have been. . . . The tragedy of Othello, Plato's records of the last scenes of the career of Socrates, and Isaac Walton's Life of George Herbert, are the most pathetic of human compositions."—William Wordsworth: Memoirs, by C. Wordsworth, D.D.

"There are also many descriptions in the poets and orators which owe their sublimity to a richness and profusion of images, in which the mind is so dazzled as to make it impossible to attend to that exact coherence and agreement of the allusions which we should require on every other occasion. I do not remember a more striking example of this than the description which is given of the king's army in the play of Henry IV.:

'All furnished, all in arms,
All plumed like ostriches that with the wind,' &c.

—Edmund Burke: On the Sublime and Beautiful: Works, Bost., Little, Brown & Co., 1866, i. 154. This edition, in 12 vols. cr. 8vo, 1866–67, is the only correct one extant, (1869:) more than 3000 errors in the former editions being rectified.

"It is absolutely necessary to recollect that the age in which Shakspeare lived was one of great abilities applied to individual and prudential purposes, and not an age of high moral feeling and lofty principle, which gives a man of genius the power of thinking of all things in reference to all. If, then, we should find that Shakspeare took these materials as they were presented to him, and yet to all effectual purposes produced the same grand result as others attempted to produce in an age so much more favourable, shall we not feel and acknowledge the purity and holiness of genius,—a light which, however it might shine on a dunghill, was as pure as the divine influence which created all the beauty of nature?"—Coleridge.

"It is Shakspeare's peculiar excellence that throughout the whole of his splendid picture-gallery (the reader will excuse the acknowledged inadequacy of the metaphor) we find individuality everywhere,—mere portrait nowhere. In all his various characters we still feel ourselves communing with the same nature, which is everywhere present as the vegetable sap in the branches, sprays, leaves, buds, blossoms, and fruits, their shapes, tastes, and colours. Speaking of the effect, that is, his works themselves, we may define the excellence of their method as consisting in that just proportion, that union and interpenetration, of the universal and the particular, which must ever pervade all works of decided genius and true science!"—S. T. Coleridge: The Friend.

"Observe the fine humanity of Shakspeare, in that his sneerers are all worthless villains. Too cunning to attach value to self-praise, and unable to obtain approval from those whom they are compelled to respect, they propitiate their own self-love by disparaging and lowering others."—Coleridge: Letters, &c., 3d ed., 1864, 244.

"Indeed, it may be taken once for all as the truth, that Shakspeare, in the absolute universality of his genius, always reverences whatever arises out of our moral nature; he never profanes his muse with a contemptuous reasoning away of the genuine and general, however unaccountable, feelings of mankind."—Coleridge: Literary Remains, ii. 174.

"I wonder that the great master who knew every thing, when he called Sleep the death of each day's life, did not call Dreams the insanity of each day's sanity."—Charles Dickens: The Uncommercial Traveller: Night-Walks.

"For I look upon him [Shakspeare] to be the worst of models, though the most extraordinary of writers."—Lord Byron.

"I am always happy to meet persons who perceive the transcendent superiority of Shakspeare over all other writers."—R. W. Emerson: Conduct of Life: Culture, (1860.)

"I care not how Shakspeare is acted: with him the thought suffices."—President Abraham Lincoln.

"The value of any work of art is to be tested rather by its effect as a whole than by the effect of particular parts. And this especially applies to a work of dramatic art; for parts even fine in themselves may, with reference to the entire effect of a drama, be blemishes instead of beauties. No writer that ever lived has approached Shakspere in the skill by which the whole is made to produce its entire and undisturbed effect. He is, thus, of all poets, the least to be appreciated from the study alone of 'specimens.' For although these may be sufficient to place him in the highest rank, in comparison with the 'specimens' of other writers, yet, separated from the parts by which they are naturally surrounded, they furnish no idea of the extraordinary harmony with which they are blended with all that has preceded and all that follows them. Shakspere, beyond every other dramatic writer, possesses the power of sustaining a continuous idea, which imparts its own organization and vitality to the most complete and apparently incongruous action, —to the most diversified and seemingly isolated characters."—CHARLES KNIGHT: Shakspere, Pictorial ed., 2d ed., 1867, iv. 474.

De Quincey, who styles Shakspeare "the protagonist on the great arena of modern poetry, and the glory of the human intellect," has some lines of strength and beauty on his illustrious subject, for a few of which we must find room:

"In the gravest sense it may be affirmed of Shakspeare, that he is among the modern luxuries of life; that life, in fact, is a new thing, and one more to be coveted, since Shakspeare has extended the domains of human consciousness, and pushed its dark frontiers into regions not so much as dimly descried or even suspected before his time, far less illuminated (as now they are) by beauty and tropical luxuriance of life. For instance,—a single instance, indeed, one which in itself is a world of new revelation,—the possible beauty of the female character had not been seen as in a dream before Shakspeare called into perfect life the radiant shapes of Desdemona, of Imogene, of Hermione, of Perdita, of Ophelia, of Miranda, and many others. The Una of Spenser, earlier by ten or fifteen years than most of these, was an idealized portrait of female innocence and virgin purity, but too shadowy and unreal for a dramatic reality. And as to the Grecian classics, let not the reader imagine for an instant that any prototype in this field of Shakesperian power can be looked for there. . . . In Shakspeare all is presented in the concrete; that is to say, not brought forward in relief, or by some effort of an anatomical artist, but embodied and imbedded, so to speak, as by the force of a creative nature, in the complex system of a human life; a life in which all the elements move and play simultaneously, and with something more than mere simultaneity or co-existence, acting and reacting each upon the other, nay, even acting by each other and through each other. In Shakspeare's characters is felt forever a real organic life, where each is for the whole and in the whole, and where the whole is for each and in each. They only are real incarnations. . . . From his works alone might be gathered a golden bead-roll of thoughts the deepest, subtilest, most pathetic, and yet most catholic and universally intelligible; the most characteristic, also, and appropriate to the particular person, the situation, and the case, yet, at the same time, applicable to the circumstances of every human being, under all the accidents of life and all vicissitudes of fortune."—De Quincey's Life of Shakspeare, in Encyc. Brit.; repub. in his Biog. Essays. See Lon. Quar. Rev., lxx. 62.

Mr. De Quincey remarks (ubi supra) that it is "the prerogative of Shakspeare to have thought more finely and more extensively than all other poets combined;" again, (Literary Reminiscences: William Godwin,) that "few men would disagree in making Shakspeare the first of human intellects."

"O mighty poet! Thy works are not, as those of other men, simply and merely great works of art, but are also like the phenomena of nature,—like the sun and the sea, the stars and the flowers, like frost and snow, hail and dew, hail-storm and thunder,—which are to be studied with entire submission of our own faculties, and in the perfect faith that in them there can be no too much or too little, nothing useless or inert; but that the further we press in our discoveries the more we shall see proofs of design and self-supporting arrangement where the careless eye had seen nothing but accident."—DE QUINCEY: The Knocking at the Gate in Macbeth.

"The striking peculiarity of Shakspeare's mind was its generic quality, its power of communication with all other minds so that it contained a universe of thought and feeling within itself, and had no one peculiar bias, or exclusive excellence, more than another. He was just like any other man, but that he was like all other men. He was the least of an egotist that it was possible to be. He was nothing in himself; but he was all that others were or that they could become. He not only had in himself the germs of every faculty and feeling, but he could follow them by anticipation, intuitively, into all their conceivable ramifications, through every change of fortune, or conflict of passion, or turn of thought. He 'had a mind reflecting ages past' and present: all the people that ever lived are there. There was no respect of persons with him. His genius shone equally on the evil and on the good, on the wise and the foolish, the monarch and the beggar. 'All corners of the earth, kings, queens, and states, maids, matrons, nay, the secrets of the grave' are hardly hid from his searching glance. He was like the genius of humanity, changing places with all of us at pleasure, and playing with our purposes as with his own. He turned the globe round for his amusement, and surveyed the generations of men, and the individuals, as they passed, with their different concerns, passions, follies, vices, virtues, actions, and motives —as well those that they knew as those which they did not know or acknowledge to themselves. The dreams of childhood, the ravings of despair, were the toys of his fancy. Airy beings waited at his call, and came at his bidding. Harmless fairies 'nodded to him and did him courtesies;' and the night-hag bestrode the blast at the command of 'his so potent art.' The world of spirits lay open to him, like the world of real men and women; and there is the same truth in his delineations of the one as of the other; for, if the preternatural characters he describes could be supposed to exist, they would speak, and feel, and act, as he makes them."—WILLIAM HAZLITT: Lects. on the English Poets, Lect. III.: On Shakspeare and Milton.

"The o'er-informing power of Shakspeare, whose eye, watching alike the minutest traces of character and the strongest movements of passion, 'glances from heaven to earth, from earth to heaven,' and, with the lambent flame of genius playing round each object, lights up the universe in a robe of its own radiance."—HAZLITT: Spirit of the Age: Sir Walter Scott.

The first edition of Hazlitt's Characters of Shakspeare's Plays was reviewed by Lord Jeffrey in the Edinburgh Review for August, 1817; and from this critical paper, repub. in Jeffrey's Contrib. to Edin. Rev., we give some extracts:

"In many points, however, he [Hazlitt] acquitted himself excellently; partly in the development of the principal characters with which Shakespeare has peopled the fancies of all English readers, but principally, we think, in the delicate sensibility with which he has traced and the natural eloquence with which he has pointed out that fond familiarity with beautiful forms and images—that eternal recurrence to what is sweet or majestic in the simple aspects of nature—that indestructible love of flowers and odours, and dews and clear waters, and soft airs and sounds, and bright skies, and woodland solitudes, and moonlight bowers, which are the Material elements of Poetry—and that fine sense of their undefined relation to mental emotion, which is its essence and vivifying Soul—and which, in the midst of Shakespeare's most busy and atrocious scenes, falls like gleams of sunshine on rocks and ruins—contrasting with all that is rugged and repulsive, and reminding us of the existence of purer and brighter elements, which HE ALONE has poured out from the richness of his own mind, without effort or restraint, and contrived to intermingle with the play of all the passions, and the vulgar course of this world's affairs, without deserting for an instant the proper business of the scene, or appearing to pause or digress, from love of ornament or need of repose! HE ALONE, who, when the object requires it, is always keen and worldly and practical—and who yet, without changing his hand or stopping his course, scatters around him, as he goes, all sounds and shapes of sweetness, and conjures up landscapes of immortal fragrance and freshness, and peoples them with spirits of glorious aspect and attractive grace—and is a thousand times more full of fancy, and imagery, and splendor, than those who, in pursuit of such endearments, have shrunk back from the delineation of character or passion, and declined the discussion of human duties and cares. More full of wisdom and ridicule and sagacity than all the moralists and satirists that ever existed, he is more wild, airy, and inventive, and more pathetic and fantastic, than all the poets of all regions and ages of the world; and has all those elements so happily mixed up in him, and bears his high faculties so temperately, that the most severe reader cannot complain of him for want of strength or of reason, nor the most sensitive, for defect of ornament or ingenuity. Every thing in him is in unmeasured abundance and unequalled perfection, but every thing so balanced and kept in subordination as not to jostle or disturb or take the place of another. The most exquisite poetical conceptions, images, and descriptions, are given with such brevity, and introduced with such skill, as merely to adorn, without loading, the sense they accompany. Although his sails are purple and perfumed, and his prow of beaten gold, they waft him on his voyage not less, but more, rapidly and directly than if they had been composed of baser materials. All his excellences, like those of Nature herself, are thrown out together; and, instead of interfering with, support and recommend each other. His flowers are not tied up in garlands, nor his fruits crushed into baskets, but spring living from the soil, in all the dew and freshness of youth; while the graceful foliage in which they lurk, and the ample branches, the rough and vigorous stem, and the wide-spreading roots on which they depend, are present along with them, and share, in their places, the equal care of their creator."

Something of his lordship's on the other side of the question will be found in the Edinburgh Review, Aug. 1811, 287. See, also, his remarks in the same periodical, xxxvi. 52, 415.

"Shakespeare is of no age. He speaks a language which thrills in our blood in spite of the separation of two hundred years. His thoughts, passions, feelings, strains of fancy, all are of this day, as they were of his own; and his genius may be contemporary with the mind of every generation for a thousand years to come. He, above all poets, looked upon men, and lived for mankind. His genius, universal in intellect and sympathy, could find in no more bounded circumference its proper sphere. It could not bear exclusion from any part of human existence. Whatever in nature and life was given to man, was given in contemplation and poetry to him also, and over the undimmed mirror of his mind passed all the shades of our mortal world. Look through all his plays, and tell what form of existence, what quality of spirit, he is most skilful to delineate! Which of al.

the manifold beings he has drawn, lives before our thoughts, our eyes, in most unpictured reality? Is it Othello, Shylock, Falstaff, Lear, the Wife of Macbeth, Imogen, Hamlet, Ariel? In none of the other great dramatists do we see any thing like a perfected art. In their works, every thing, it is true, exists, in some shape or other, which can be required in a drama taking for its interest the absolute interest of human life and nature; but, after all, may not the very best of their works be looked on as sublime masses of chaotic confusion, through which the elements of our moral being appear? It was Shakespeare, the most unlearned of all our writers, who first exhibited on the stage perfect models, perfect images, of all human characters and of all human events. We cannot conceive any skill that could from his great characters remove any defect, or add to their perfect composition. Except in him, we look in vain for the entire fulness, the self-consistency and self-completeness, of perfect art. All the rest of our drama may be regarded rather as a testimony of the state of genius—of the state of mind of the country, full of great practical disposition, and great tragic capacity and power—than as a collection of the works of an art. Of Shakespeare and Homer alone it may be averred that we miss in them nothing of the greatness of nature. In all other poets we do; we feel the measure of their power, and the restraint under which it is held; but in Shakespeare and in Homer all is free and unbounded as in nature, and as we travel along with them, in a car drawn by celestial steeds, our view seems ever interminable as before, and still equally far from off the glorious horizon."—Prof. John Wilson: Works, vii. 1857, 420, (see, also, 102, 398, 399;) from Blackw. Mag., May, 1819.

"The name of Shakspeare is the greatest in our literature—it is the greatest in all literature. No man ever came near to him in the creative powers of the mind; no man had ever such strength at once and such variety of imagination. Coleridge has most felicitously applied to him a Greek epithet, given before to I know not whom, certainly none so deserving of it,—μυριόνους, the thousand-souled Shakspeare. The number of characters in his plays is astonishingly great, without reckoning those who, although transient, have often their individuality all distinct, all types of human life in well-defined differences. Yet he never takes an abstract quality to embody it, scarcely perhaps a definite condition of manners, as Jonson does; nor did he draw much, as I conceive, from living models: there is no manifest appearance of personal caricature in his comedies, though in some slight traits of character this may not improbably have been the case. Above all, neither he nor his contemporaries wrote for the stage in the worst, though most literal, and of late years the most usual, sense, making the servants and handmaids of dramatic invention to lord over it, and limiting the capacities of the poet's mind to those of the performers. If this poverty of the representative department of the drama had hung like an incumbent fiend on the creative power of Shakspeare, how would he have poured forth with such inexhaustible prodigality the vast diversity of characters that we find in some of his plays? This is it in which he leaves far behind not the dramatists alone, but all writers of fiction. Compare with him Homer, the tragedians of Greece, the poets of Italy, Plautus, Cervantes, Molière, Addison, Le Sage, Fielding, Richardson, Scott, the romancers of the elder or later schools—one man has far more than surpassed them all. Others may have been as sublime, others may have been more pathetic, others may have equalled him in grace and purity of language, and have shunned some of its faults; but the philosophy of Shakspeare, his intimate searching out of the human heart, whether in the gnomic form of sentence or in the dramatic exhibition of character, is a gift peculiarly his own."—Hallam: Introduc. to the Lit. of Europe, Part 3, chap. vi.; and see Index.

"The works of Shakspeare are miracles of art. In a piece which may be read aloud in three hours, we see a character gradually unfold all its recesses to us. We see it change with the change of circumstances. The petulant youth rises into the politic and warlike sovereign. The profuse and courteous philanthropist soars into a hater and scorner of his kind. The tyrant is altered, by the chastening of affliction, into a pensive moralist. The veteran general, distinguished by coolness, sagacity, and self-command, sinks under a conflict between love strong as death and jealousy cruel as the grave. The brave and loyal subject passes step by step to the extremities of human depravity. We trace his progress from the first dawnings of unlawful ambition to the cynical melancholy of his impenitent remorse. Yet in these pieces there are no unnatural transitions. Nothing is omitted; nothing is crowded. Great as are the changes, narrow as is the compass within which they are exhibited, they shock us as little as the gradual alterations of those familiar faces we see every evening and every morning. The magical skill of the poet resembles that of the Dervise in the Spectator, who condensed all the events of seven years into the single moment during which the king held his head under the water. . . . Dryden truly said that > 'Shakspeare's magic could not copied be:

Lord Macaulay: Essays: John Dryden.

His lordship ascribes to Shakspeare "supreme and universal excellence;" pronounces him "the greatest of poets," (on Mitford's Greece;) the Prince of Poets, (on Milton;) "the greatest poet that ever lived," (on John Dryden;) declares that he "has had neither equal nor second," (on Madame D'Arblay,) and considers Othello "perhaps the greatest work in the world," (on the Principal Italian Writers.) See, also, his reviews of Moore's Life of Byron, and Croker's Boswell's Johnson.

It is the testimony of another eminent critic that "Shakespeare has transcendent excellence of every sort, and for every critic,—except those who are repelled by the faults which usually attend sublime virtues,—character and manners, morality and prudence, as well as imagery and passion."—Sir James Mackintosh: Edin. Rev., xxii. 34.

Again, in conversation with our late countryman, Alexander H. Everett, he remarked,

"Shakspeare's great superiority over other writers consists in his deep knowledge of human nature. Châteaubriand says of him, 'Il a souvent des mots terribles.' It has been thought by some that those observations upon human nature which appear so profound and remarkable, may, after all, lie nearest to the surface, and be taken up most naturally by the early writers in every language; but we do not find them in Homer. Homer is the finest ballad-writer in any language. The flow and fullness of his style is beautiful; but he has nothing of the deep piercing observation of Shakspeare."—N. Amer. Rev., xxxv. 445.

"Shakspere was, and is, beyond all comparison, the greatest Poet that the world has ever seen. He is greatest in general power, and greatest in style, which is a symbol or evidence of power. . . . He was not a mere poet in the vulgar sense of the term. . . . On the contrary, he was a man eminently acute, logical, philosophical. His reasoning faculty was on a par with his imagination, and pervaded all his works as completely. . . . We hold him to have been not one, but legion; and we think that in all the cases where critics have attempted to distinguish him by any one particular excellence of intellect, they have failed. . . . His great merit, as it appears to us, is that he had no peculiar, no prominent merit: his mind was so well constituted, so justly and admirably balanced, that it had nothing in excess."—Barry Cornwall: Preface to his edition of the Works of Ben Jonson, 1838, &c., r. 8vo.

We may be charged with needlessly multiplying quotations, (yet "what are these among so many?") but to prove by the testimony of those who have ranged over the literature of all languages that the English bard is not only a great poet, but the greatest of all poets, will not, we are persuaded, be a thankless office. And shall we not claim the second greatest bard also?

"A great poet," says Landor, "represents a great portion of the human race. Nature delegated to Shakspeare the interests and direction of the whole: to Milton a smaller part, but with plenary power over it, and she bestowed on him such fervour and majesty of eloquence as on no other mortal in any age. . . . A rib of Shakspeare would have made a Milton: the same portion of Milton, all poets born ever since."

See, also, Milton, John, p. 1320, supra.

"All the faults that ever were committed in poetry would be but as air to earth if we could weigh them against one single thought or image such as almost every scene exhibits in every drama of his unrivalled genius."—Landor: Imaginary Conversations, (Southey.)

> "In poetry there is but one supreme,
> Though there are many angels round his throne,
> Mighty and beauteous, while his face is hid."—Landor.

> "Shakespeare in Italy.
> Beyond our shores, beyond the Apennines,
> Shakespeare, from heaven came thy creative breath!
> Mid citron grove and overarching vines
> Thy genius wept at Desdemona's death:
> In the proud sire thou badest anger cease,
> And Juliet by her Romeo sleeps in peace.
> Then rose thy voice above the stormy sea,
> And Ariel flew from Prospero to thee."—W. S. Landor, Jul. 1, 1860: Atlantic Monthly, May, 1866, 549: Last Days of Walter Savage Landor, (by Miss Kate Field.) Continued in No. for June, 1866, where (p. 701) Landor is cited as calling "Shakespeare the wisest of men, as the greatest of poets."

"I have read and studied our great dramatist for nearly half a century; and if I could read and study him for half a century more, I should yet be far from arriving at an accurate knowledge of his works, or an adequate appreciation of his worth. He is an author whom no man can read enough, nor study enough."—J. Payne Collier: Notes and Emendations to the Text of Shakespeare's Plays, &c., 1853, Introduction.

"Make," says Bishop Watson, "Bacon, then, and Locke—and why should I not add that sweet child of nature, Shakspeare?—your chief companions through life; let them be ever upon your table, and, when you have an hour to spare, spend it upon them; and I will answer for their giving you entertainment and instruction as long as you live."

We like these clerical testimonies to the value of the poetry, philosophy, and wisdom of the greatest of all poets, philosophers, and sages: let us adduce one or two more of such from the many on record. A profound teacher of one of the "straitest of all the sects" into which a large portion of the modern religious world is divided, thus counsels "the man who would preach theology successfully:"

"Let him not deem it a profanation of his sacred vocation to be familiar with the Bard of Avon, that man who seemed to look into the very soul itself, and see how it would act and speak in any situation of life; who drew his characters not from his knowledge of what had been, but from his intuitive perception of what would be if human beings should be placed in certain circumstances; that man who, 'with no systematic knowledge or scholastic study, comprehended all the powers and uses of the English language so as to speak as no uninspired man ever spoke; who understood all the springs of human motives, and entered into every human character, male and female, English Roman, African, Danish, and Venetian, and put it on as though it were his own, and who could feel and speak as a king or a clown, the crazy or the sage, the lover, the politician, the glutton, hoary age, and the little child, (Biblio. Sacra, ii. p. 692,)' and who seemed to be familiar with every human being that ever has lived, and to know what any one would do who ever would live."—Rev. Albert Barnes: The Relation of Theology to Preaching: Essays and Reviews, 1855, ii. 86.

"Those marvellous works that have placed him in creative genius at the head of the race, . . . Hamlet, Lear, and The Tempest, . . . those wonderful creations of genius."—Ibid.: Presby. Quar. Rev., July, 1826, lx.: The Readjustment of Christianity.

"Dr. Chalmers," remarks his biographer, "within the last two or three years of his life, completed an entire perusal of Gibbon, Shakspeare, and Milton. The single play of Shakspeare's in which he took most delight was 'Midsummer Night's Dream,' among the fairy pictures of which he delighted to revel. 'I look,' he would say, after laying down the book, 'I look on Shakspeare as an intellectual miracle.'"

Archbishop Sharp advised all young divines to unite the reading of Shakspeare to the study of the Bible, and declared that these two books had made him Archbishop of York; and Mr. Speaker Onslow, who tells us this anecdote, adds,

"His wonderful knowledge of human nature, the dignity and nobleness of his sentiments, and the amazing force and brightness of his expression, do indeed make Shakespear to be a great pattern for the gravest and most solemn compositions."—Burnet's Own Times, 2d ed., 1833, iii. 107.

"I doubt whether Shakspeare ever had any thought at all of making his personages speak characteristically. In most instances, I conceive,—probably in all,—he drew characters correctly because he could not avoid it; and would never have attained, in that department, such excellence as he has, if he had made any studied efforts for it. And the same, probably, may be said of Homer, and of those other writers who have excelled the most in delineating characters. Shakspeare's peculiar genius consisted chiefly, I conceive, in his forming the same distinct and consistent idea of an imaginary person that an ordinary man forms of a real and well-known individual. We usually conjecture pretty accurately, concerning a very intimate acquaintance, how he would speak or act on any supposed occasion; if any one should report to us his having done or said something quite out of character, we should at once be struck with the inconsistency; and we often represent to ourselves, and describe to others, without any conscious effort, not only the substance of what he would have been likely to say, but even his characteristic phrases and looks. Shakspeare could no more have endured an expression from the lips of Macbeth inconsistent with the character originally conceived, than an ordinary man could attribute to his most respectable acquaintance the behaviour of a ruffian, or to a human being the voice of a bird, or to a European the features and hue of a negro. Merely from the vividness of the original conception, characteristic conduct and language spontaneously suggested themselves to the great dramatist's pen. He called his personages into being, and left them, as it were, to speak and act for themselves. . . . Slender, and Shallow, and Aguecheek, as Shakspeare has painted them, though equally fools, resemble one another no more than Richard, and Macbeth, and Julius Cæsar. . . . The first of dramatists, who might have been perhaps the first of orators, has offered some excellent exemplifications of this rule, [the use of an oblique description;] especially in the speech of Antony over Cæsar's body."—Archbishop Whately: Bacon's Essays.

"If I preach about Shakspere, and the method of treatment should be somewhat unusual in your ear, I hope you will remember that this is the very thing which I am set to do. Why, then, I would ask, have we just cause to celebrate with a jubilee the fact that three hundred years ago Shakspere was born; or, in other words, why do we thank God that such a man has been among us? What is there we have read in his writings to render them an enduring benefit to us,—a possession forever,—such as we feel makes us richer, wiser, and, using it aright, better than we should have been without them? It is this question which we propose to discuss. Those who mould a nation's life should be men acquainted with God's scheme of the universe, cheerfully working in their own appointed sphere the work which has been assigned them, accepting God's world because it is His, with all its strange riddles and infinite perplexities, with all the burdens which it lays upon each one of us:—not fiercely dashing and shaking themselves like imprisoned birds against the bars of their prison-house, or moodily nourishing in their own hearts, and in the hearts of others, thoughts of discontent, revolt, and despair. Such a poet, I am bold to affirm, we possessed in Shakspere."—Archbishop Trench: Sermon, Tercentenary of Shakspere, Stratford-upon-Avon, April 23, 1864.

"Presumptuous as the endeavour may appear to classify, there would seem to be a few great tragedies which occupy summits of their own,—'Macbeth,' 'Hamlet,' 'Lear,' 'Othello.' . . . I feel indeed tempted to upbraid myself when I think of all the outlying realms of strength and comeliness which I thus seem to leave outside: the stately forms of Roman heroes;—the chivalry marshalled around our Plantagenet Kings;—the wit of Mercutio, Beatrice, and Falstaff;—the maiden grace of Imogen and Miranda; Ariel the dainty sprite; Oberon and his elfin Court; the memories which people the glades of the Ardennes; the Rialto of Venice; giving to each glorious scene and sunny shore a stronger lien upon our associations than is possessed even by their own native land."—Earl of Carlisle: Address, Tercentenary of Shakspere, ut supra.

The speculative Scotchman who interpreted the wisdom of the Schools to modern academies pronounces Shakspeare "the greatest observer of human nature," (Sir William Hamilton's Lects. on Metaphysics, No. XXXIII.;) the brilliant Englishman who loved to dissect the faculties of the mind, as the anatomist classifies the muscles and arteries of the frame, styles Shakspeare "the most august of human intellects," (De Quincey's Life of Shakspeare;) and the practical American, who had long compared the page of the poet with the actions of man, refers to Shakspeare as "the great master of the maxims of life and conduct," (Works of Daniel Webster, 1851, i. 174.) Of foreign opinions upon Shakspeare we had intended to quote a number,—Voltaire, Châteaubriand, Ulrici, Guizot, Göthe, and Schlegel; but we have lingered too long in England to admit of this, and our visit to the continent must be necessarily brief.

"The first foreigner whose vision was keen enough to see beyond the mists of prejudice and pedantry, who could discern the eternal principles of art under every variety of form, and who had the glory of proclaiming Shakspeare to be the greatest dramatist the world had ever seen, was Gottlob Ephraim Lessing."—Edin. Rev., July, 1849, 61.

"We discoursed upon English literature, on the greatness of Shakspeare, and on the unfavourable position held by all English dramatic authors who have appeared after that poetical giant. 'A dramatic talent of any importance,' said Göthe, 'could not forbear to notice Shakspeare's works; nay, could not forbear to study them. Having studied them, he must be aware that Shakspeare has already exhausted the whole of human nature in all its tendencies, in all its heights and depths, and that, in fact, there remains for him, the after-comer, nothing more to do. And how could one get courage to put pen to paper, if one were conscious, in an earnest appreciating spirit, that such unfathomable and unattainable excellences were already in existence? It fared better with me fifty years ago in my own dear Germany. I could soon come to an end with all that then existed; it could not long awe me, or occupy my attention. I soon left behind me German literature, and the study of it, and turned my thoughts to life and to production. So on and on I went, in my own natural development, and on and on I fashioned the productions of epoch after epoch. And, at every stage of life and development, my standard of excellence was not much higher than what at such a step I was able to attain. But had I been born an Englishman, and had all those numerous masterpieces been brought before me in all their power at my first dawn of youthful consciousness, they would have overpowered me, and I should not have known what to do. I could not have gone on with such fresh light-heartedness, but should have had to bethink myself, and look about for a long time 'to find some new outlet.'"—Eckermann's Conversations with Göthe, i. 114, 115: see Masson's Essays, Biog. and Crit., 1856, 25.

"Shakspeare is the pride of his nation. A late poet has, with propriety, called him 'the genius of the British isles.' He was the idol of his contemporaries: during the interval indeed of puritanical fanaticism which broke out in the next generation and rigorously proscribed all liberal arts and literature, and during the reign of the Second Charles, when his works were either not acted at all, or, if so, very much changed and disfigured, his fame was a while obscured, only to shine forth again, about the beginning of the last century, with more than its original brightness; and since then it has but increased in lustre with the course of time; and for centuries to come (I speak it with the greatest confidence) it will, like an Alpine avalanche, continue to gather strength at every moment of its progress. Of the future extension of his fame, the enthusiasm with which he was naturalized in Germany the moment that he was known, is a significant earnest. . . . Shakspeare's knowledge of mankind has become proverbial: in this his superiority is so great that he has justly been called the master of the human heart. A readiness to remark the mind's fainter and involuntary utterances, and the power to express with certainty the meaning of these signs, as determined by experience and reflection, constitutes 'the observer of men;' but tacitly to draw from these still further conclusions, and to arrange the separate observations according to grounds of probability, into a just and valid combination,—this, it may be said, is to know men. . . . Never perhaps was there so comprehensive a talent for characterization as Shakspeare's. It not only grasps every diversity of rank, age, and sex, down to the lispings of infancy; not only do the king and the beggar, the hero and the pickpocket, the sage and the idiot, speak and act with equal truthfulness; not only does he transport himself to distant ages and foreign nations, and portray with the greatest accuracy (a few apparent violations of costume excepted) the spirit of the ancient Romans, of the French in the wars with the English, of the English themselves during a great part of their history, of the Southern Europeans, (in the serious part of many comedies,) the cultivated society of the day, and the rude barbarism of a Norman fore-time; his human characters have not only such depth and individuality that they do not admit of being classed under common names, and are inexhaustible even in conception: no, this Prometheus not merely forms men, he opens the gates of the magical world of spirits, calls up the midnight ghost, exhibits before us the witches with their unhallowed rites, peoples the air with sportive fairies and sylphs; and these beings, though existing only in the imagination, nevertheless possess such truth and consistency, that even with such misshapen abortions as Caliban he extorts the assenting conviction that were there such beings they would so conduct themselves. In a word, as he carries a bold and pregnant fancy into the kingdom of nature, on the other hand he carries nature into the regions of fancy which lie beyond the confines of reality. We are lost in astonishment at the close intimacy he brings us into with the extraordinary, the wonderful, and the unheard-of. . . . If Shakspeare deserves our admiration for his characters, he is equally deserving of it for his exhibition of passion, taking this word in its widest signification, as including every mental condition, every tone, from indifference or familiar mirth to the wildest rage and despair. He gives us the history of minds; he lays open to us, in a single word, a whole series of their anterior states. His passions do not stand at the same height from first to last, as is the case with so many tragic poets, who, in the language of Lessing, are thorough masters of the legal style of love. He paints, with inimitable veracity, the gradual advance from the first origin; 'he gives,' as Lessing says, 'a living picture of all the slight and secret artifices by which a feeling steals into our souls, of all the imperceptible advantages which it there gains, of all the stratagems by which it makes every other passion subservient to itself, till it becomes the sole tyrant of our desires and of our aversions.' Of all the poets, perhaps he alone has portrayed the mental diseases, melancholy, delirium, lunacy, with such inexpressible and, in every respect, definite truth, that the physician may enrich his observations from them in the same manner as from real cases. . . . And this tragical Titan, who storms the heavens and threatens to tear the world from off its hinges; who, more terrible than Æschylus, makes our hair to stand on end, and congeals our blood with horror, possessed at the same time the insinuating loveliness of the sweetest poetry; he toys with love like a child, and his songs die away on the ear like melting sighs. He unites in his soul the utmost elevation and the utmost depth; and the most opposite and even apparently irreconcilable properties subsist in him peacefully together. The world of spirits and nature have laid all their treasures at his feet: in strength a demi-god, in profundity of view a prophet, in all-seeing wisdom a guardian spirit of a higher order, he lowers himself to mortals, as if unconscious of his superiority, and is as open and unassuming as a child. . . . Shakspeare's comic talent is equally wonderful with that which he has shown in the pathetic and tragic: it stands on an equal elevation, and possesses equal extent and profundity; in all that I have hitherto said, I only wished to guard against admitting that the former preponderated. He is highly inventive in comic situations and motives; it will be hardly possible to show whence he has taken any of them; whereas, in the serious parts of his dramas, he has generally laid hold of some well-known story. His comic characterization is equally true, various, and profound with his serious. So little is he disposed to caricature, that rather, it may be said, many of his traits are almost too nice and delicate for the stage,—that they can only be made available by a great actor and fully understood by an acute audience. Not only has he delineated many kinds of folly, but even of sheer stupidity has he contrived to give a most diverting and entertaining picture. . . . The whole of Shakspeare's productions bear the certain stamp of his original genius; but yet no writer was ever farther removed from every thing like a mannerism derived from habit or personal peculiarities. Rather is he, such is the diversity of tone and colour, which varies according to the quality of subjects he assumes, a very Proteus. Each of his compositions is like a world of its own, moving in its own sphere. They are like works of art, finished in one pervading style, which reveals the freedom and judicious choice of their author. If the formation of a work throughout, even in its minutest parts, in conformity with a leading idea; if the domination of one animating spirit over all the means of execution, deserves the name of correctness, (and this, excepting in matters of grammar, is the only proper sense of the term;) we shall then, after allowing to Shakspeare all the higher qualities which demand our admiration, be also compelled, in most cases, to concede to him the title of a correct poet."—August Wilhelm von Schlegel: Lects. on Dramat. Art and Lit., (delivered in 1808,) Lects. XXII., XXIII., Black's trans., ed. 1846, 345, 361, 363, 364, 368, 371, 378.

"Ever since I have been able to think and feel, I have recognized Shakspere as the first among all poets; the richest and deepest, the most instructive and delightful, the most mysterious and the clearest, and to whom I devoted myself with ever new reverence and love. . . . In Shakspere, poetry, virtue, truth, life, and history is altogether one: he is therefore not only a great poet in the usual sense of the word, but also for every thinking being an instructive author; the best expounder of the scriptural text, 'the earth is everywhere the Lord's.'"—Franz Horn: Shakspeare's Schauspiele Erläutert, 1822, Prefaces, vii.–x.

"In one word, this unparalleled gigantic spirit, like the Indian Brahma, readily takes on him divers incarnations, of which none perhaps may succeed in imbibing and reflecting all his fulness and splendour. . . . The incomparable Briton is not generally to be read as we read Kotzebue or Clausen; whoever approaches him feels himself moved by something elevated—a reverence-commanding spirit stands before him, who requires attentive consideration, and even a self-collectedness."—Julius Koerner, of Schneeberg: Translation of Shakspere into German.

Bürger dedicates his translation of Macbeth into German to his friend Biester, as a remembrance of the hours at Göttingen,

"When we together enjoyed ourselves with a kind of religious extacy over the greatest of all poetical geniuses that ever has been, or ever will be."

"In estimating the value of Shakespearian criticism, the distinction between its relative and comparative importance is too often lost sight of. Relatively to the text it is the most important study in English literature; viewed comparatively with that text, it sinks into insignificance. I would not surrender the little Induction to the Taming of the Shrew in exchange for all the results, present and future, of all Shakespearian criticism. On the other hand, the true restoration of a single line in Shakespeare is well worth the best volume of any other English writer.

"The true secret of the dislike in some quarters to Shakespeare Commentary is, I believe, to be found in the baseless fancy that the critics seek an alliance in the matter of fame with his imperishable glory. As well might one accuse the commentators on the Bible of a wish to be thought inspired. Shakespeare, like the Bible, is the easiest book to understand in one sense—the most difficult in another. A little patient study of the subject will convince any one that the works of Shakespeare require and deserve, for their complete interpretation, a larger amount of commentary than do those of any other English writer."—J. O. Halliwell: Shakespeariana: A List of Works Illustrative of the Life and Writings of Shakespeare, &c., 1850–1866, 1867, 8vo, 60, 61.

This citation affords an opportunity for the expression of our thanks, as a student and lover of Shakspeare, to Mr. Halliwell, by whose self-denying labours so large an amount of valuable Shakspeariana has been given to the world! Well is it for us all that, to quote his own words, (Shakespeariana, 1867, Pref., 6,) he "can afford to work at these favourite studies without the prospect of remuneration." In the volume just cited, the collector will find a list of desirable books, some of which we presume (we write in October, 1869) may yet be procured.

Medical Opinions upon Shakspeare.

"I would briefly refer to the fallacy pervading all the poetic, dramatic, and artistic descriptions of insanity, save and excepting our own illustrious and immortal Shakspeare, whose wonderfully truthful delineations of the different types of disordered mind, embodied in passages of rare and matchless beauty, must ever entitle him to the distinction of holding the foremost rank among the most eminent psychologists that have conferred lustre on the annals of this or any other country. . . . This great magician, and all-but inspired poet."—Forbes Winslow, M.D., D.C.L.: Obscure Diseases of the Brain and Mind, 2d Amer. ed., Phila., 1866, ch. iv., 58.

"The extent and accuracy of the medical, physiological, and psychological knowledge displayed in the dramas of William Shakspeare, like the knowledge there manifested on all matters upon which the rays of his mighty genius fell, have excited the wonder and astonishment of all men who, since his time, have brought their minds to the investigation of those subjects upon which so much light has been thrown by the researches of modern science. Shakspeare's knowledge extended far beyond the range of ordinary observation, and comprehended subjects such as in our day, and we may suppose in his, were regarded as strictly professional and special. . . . In fact, we believe a very complete physiological and psychological system could be educed from the writings of Shakspeare,—a system in complete accordance, in almost every essential particular, with that which we now possess as the result of the scientific research and experience of the last two centuries. In the time of Shakspeare these sciences, like all others, were very imperfectly understood by men who devoted their lives to the investigation of them. . . . The late Dr. Brigham, who had seen and treated more than four thousand cases of insanity, declared that he had more than once seen the counterpart of Hamlet, as well as of all Shakspeare's insane characters; and he describes with his usual clearness and brevity the peculiar characteristics of each."—A. O. Kellogg, M.D., Assistant Physician State Lunatic Asylum, Utica, N. York: Shakspeare's Delineations of Insanity, Imbecility, and Suicide, N. York, 1866, 1, 3, 37, n.

See, also, Shakspeare's Delineations of Insanity, by Isaac Ray, in Amer. Jour. of Insanity, vol. iii., and (Shakspeariana, No. 705) A Study of Hamlet, by Dr. Conolly.

"It is remarkable that two of the most perfect pictures of insanity presented to us in the plays of Shakspeare are instances of feigned madness,—namely, the madness of Hamlet, assumed to escape the machinations of his uncle, and that of Edgar, in Lear, assumed to escape the persecutions of his brother. These inimitable representations of the phenomena of insanity are so perfect that in their perusal we are insensibly led to forget that they are feigned. In both instances, however, the deception was practised by educated gentlemen; and on the authority of the great dramatic psychologist it may, perhaps, be accepted that the phenomena of insanity may be feigned by a skilful actor like Hamlet so perfectly that no flaw can be detected in the representation."—Dr. J. C. Bucknill: on the Diagnosis of Insanity: Bucknill and Tuke's Man. of Psychol. Med., 1858, 8vo.

"An eminent authority makes the following observation upon the poet's description of Gloucester's death, [King Henry VI., Part 2, Act. III., Sc. II.:]

"'My readers will smile, perhaps, to see me quoting Shakespeare among physicians and theologists; but not one of all their tribe, populous though it be, could describe so exquisitely the marks of apoplexy, conspiring with the struggles for life, and the agonies of suffocation, to deform the countenance of the dead: so curiously does our poet present to our conceptions all the signs from which it might be inferred that the good Duke Humfrey had died a violent death.'—Bell's Principles of Surgery, 1815, ii. 557."—Staunton's Shakesp., ed. 1866, ii. 394.

"Perhaps even now the highest and best delineations of insanity have been drawn, not by Pritchard and others who have particularly studied and observed it, but by one who may almost never have seen an insane person, and who had not himself studied the subject, but by a man endowed, undoubtedly, with the highest genius that the world has known—as drawn in the character of Lear, Hamlet, Jaques, and in the tender sympathy, the knowledge of the disease, and of the proper mode of treatment of the disease, expressed in the characters of Ophelia and Cordelia."—Rev. Albert Barnes: Lects. on the Evid. of Chris., N. York, 1868, 12mo, Lect. VII.

A complete Shakspeariana—a catalogue raisonné of all the editions, in all languages, of Shakspeare's works, and the commentaries on and illustrations thereof, the whole accompanied by bibliographical, biographical, and critical annotations—would be a noble offering to the memory of the poet, and should be laid upon the altar at Stratford, April 23, 1864,—the day of the tri-centenary celebration of the birth of "the most august of human intellects."

The above was written and our article on Shakspeare prepared for the press in 1861. In 1863 appeared in Mr. H. G. Bohn's edition of Lowndes's Bibliographer's Manual, Part 8, 2253-2366, such a Bibliography of Shakspeare as we had indicated in our preceding remarks. This has enabled us, by the courteous permission of its author, to greatly improve our original sketch; and we have been at no little pains to extend our lists of Editions of Shakspeare's Works, and Shakspeariana, to the year in which we write, (1869.)

"These quotations sufficiently show that the presiding genius of the Avon is Shakspere. But, even without this paramount consideration, the river, although little visited, abounds with picturesque scenery and interesting objects. A big dull book has been written upon it, by one who could neither put down with exactness what he saw, nor impart any life to his meagre descriptions. From the first section of his book . . . to the last . . . the Picturesque Views of Mr. Samuel Ireland appear to us the production of the most spiritless of delineators. We would not recommend the tourist to encumber himself with this heavy book."—CHARLES KNIGHT: Pictorial Shaksp., 2d ed., 1867, viii. 255, (William Shakspere: a Biography.)

575. Shakespeare's Puck, and his Folkslore, Illustrated from the Superstitions of all Nations, but more especially from the Earliest Religion and Rites of Northern Europe and the Wends; by William Bell, Phil. Dr.: Printed for the Author, 1852–60, 2 vols. fp. 8vo, and Shakespeare in Germany, 1864, fp. 8vo. One of the most learned works on the great bard. See Lon. Athen., 1855, 1055, and 1860, ii. 708.

COLLIER CONTROVERSY, Nos. 576–598.

576. Notes and Emendations to the Text of Shakespeare's Plays from the Early Manuscript Corrections in a Copy of the Folio 1632, in the Possession of J. Payne Collier, Esq., (see COLLECTIVE EDITIONS, &c., No. 102,) Shaksp. Soc., 1852, 8vo, pp. 512. It was withdrawn from the Society's List, and published, Lon., 1853, 8vo; N. York, 1853, 12mo; 2d ed., Revised and Enlarged, (with Omissions,) Lon., 1853, 8vo, pp. 528. Mr. Collier printed for private distribution, 1853, four 8vo pages containing 18 fac-similes besides the fac-simile in this volume: 30 copies. To the references already given (COLLIER, JOHN PAYNE) we add: Lon. Athen., 1852 and 1853, Indexes; 1858, ii. 612, and 1859, i. 559; Blackw. Mag., Aug., Sept., and Oct. 1853; N. Brit. Rev., Feb. 1854; N. Amer. Rev., April, 1854, 390, (by F. Bowen,) and Jan. 1859, 249, (by E. H. Abbot;) Edin. Rev., April, 1856, art. ii. The Notes and Emendations were translated into German by Dr. Leo, 1853, and form the substance of Dr. Julius Frese's supplementary volume to Shakespeare's Dramatic Works, Berlin, 1853–54, 9 vols. sq. 12mo, and of Dr. Delius's Ueber das Englische Theaterwesen zu Shakespeare's Zeit, Bremen, 1853, 8vo.

577. A Few Remarks on the Emendation "Who Smothers Her with Painting," in the Play of Cymbeline, discovered by Mr. Collier in a Corrected Copy of the Second Edition of Shakespeare; by J. O. Halliwell, 1852, 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1852, 171, 403. Mr. Collier responded in the Addenda to his Notes and Emendations, first edition.

578. The Text of Shakespeare Vindicated from the Interpolations and Corruptions advocated by J. P. Collier, Esq. in his "Notes and Emendations," by S. W. Singer, 1853, 8vo; 1855, 8vo; 1858, 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1853, 644, 671; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1853, 543.

579. A Few Notes on Shakespeare, with Occasional Remarks on the Emendations of the Manuscript Corrector in Mr. Collier's Copy of the Folio 1632; by the Rev. A. Dyce, 1853, 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1853, 671, 700, 796; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1853, 543.

580. A Few Words in Reply to the Animadversions of the Rev. Mr. Dyce on Mr. Hunter's "Disquisition on the Tempest," (1839,) and his "New Illustrations of the Life, Studies, and Writings of Shakespeare," (1845,)—contained in his work entitled "A Few Notes on Shakespeare: with Occasional Remarks on the Emendations of the Manuscript Corrector in Mr. Collier's copy of the Folio 1632;" by the Author of the "Disquisition" and the "Illustrations," 1853, 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1853, 796; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1853, 543.

581. Observations on the Shakesperian Forgeries at Bridgewater House, illustrative of a Fac-Simile of the Spurious Letter of H. S.; by J. O. Halliwell, 1853, 4to, pp. 8, with a fac-simile. Privately printed: 25 copies. Relates chiefly to MS. alterations in a copy of the Folio of 1623, and to six MSS. in the Bridgewater Collection.

582. Observations on some of the Manuscript Emendations of the Text of Shakespeare; and Are They Copyright? by J. O. Halliwell, 1853, 8vo, pp. 16. Privately printed. See Lon. Athen., 1853, 916.

583. Curiosities of Modern Shakesperian Criticism; by J. O. Halliwell; with a Fac-Simile of the Dulwich Letter, 1853, 8vo. This is a reply to the review of Halliwell's folio Shakespeare, vol. i., in Lon. Athen., 1853, 796.

585. The Grimaldi Shakspere: Notes and Emendations on the Plays of Shakspere, from a Recently-Discovered Annotated Copy by the Late Joseph Grimaldi, Esq., Comedian, 1853, 8vo. This is a burlesque, or, according to Lon. Athen., 1853, 987, "a squib." In the passage in the speech of Ratcliff, (Richard III., Act V., Scene 3,)

> —— "my lord, 'tis I. The early village cock > Hath twice done salutation to the morn," the annotator—not here original—proposes to remove the stop after I. Ratcliff thus reassures the nervous monarch "that 'all is serene,' by the cheerful jocularity of his response."

586. Notes and Emendations on the "Grimaldi Shakspeare," 1853, 12mo. Reprinted, as "forming a Supplemental Volume to his Works," N. York, 1853, 12mo.

587. Shakespeare's Scholar: being Historical and Critical Studies of his Text, Characters, and Commentators; with an Examination of Mr. Collier's Folio of 1623, by Richard Grant White, N. York and Lon., 1854, 8vo, pp. 504. See Lon. Athen., 1854, 1085, (by R. G. White;) Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1854, 1029; Colburn's New Mon. Mag., Chris. Exam., South. Lit. Mess., Graham's Mag., and Putnam's Mag., all 1854; N. Amer. Rev., April, 1855, 528, and (by E. H. Abbot) Jan. 1859, 244; Atlantic Mon., Oct. 1859, (by R. G. White;) Lon. Reader, 1865, i. 596; COLLECTIVE EDITIONS OF SHAKSPEARE'S PLAYS, &c., Nos. 98, 102. This volume does not represent the more matured views of its author: see his letter in Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 854.

588. Literary Cookery, with Reference to Matter attributed to Coleridge and Shakspeare: a Letter addressed to the Athenæum, &c., (by A. E. Brae,) 1855, 8vo. Suppressed. 25 sold. Mr. Collier prosecuted the publisher, but in vain. See No. 596; Olphar Hamst's Hand-Book for Fictitious Names, 1868, 5.

589. Seven Lectures on Shakespeare and Milton, by the Late S. T. Coleridge; with a List of all the MS. Emendations in Mr. Collier's Folio Shakespeare of 1623, and an Introductory Preface by J. P. Collier, 1856, 8vo, 12*s.*; 2d ed., (1862,) 3*s.* 6*d.* See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1856, ii. 600; Lon. Athen., 1856, 1299.

590. Letter to the Editor of "Notes and Queries" on the Questionable Credit of that Periodical and the Shakspeare Adulterators, by W. R. Arrowsmith, 1859, 8vo.

591. Strictures on Mr. Collier's New Edition of Shakespeare published in 1858; by the Rev. A. Dyce, 1859, 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1859, ii. 397.

592. The Shakspeare Fabrications; or, The MS. Notes of the Perkins Folio shown to be of Recent Origin; with an Appendix on the Authorship of the Ireland Forgeries, by C. Mansfield Ingleby, LL.D., 1859, fp. 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1859, ii. 233, and 1860, i. 547, 583; Lon. Critic, Aug. 27, 1859; Lon. Lit. Gaz., Sept. 17, 1859.

593. An Inquiry into the Genuineness of the Manuscript Corrections in Mr. J. Payne Collier's Annotated Shakspere Folio 1632; and of Certain Shaksperian Documents likewise published by Mr. Collier; by N. E. S. A. Hamilton, 1860, 4to. See Lon. Athen., 1859, ii. 50, and 1860, i. 229, 237, 269, 411, 512, 583, 854, ii. 290; Lon. Critic, Feb. 11, 25, and Mar. 3, 1860; Lon. Lit. Gaz., Feb. 18 and Mar. 17, 1860; Lon. Spec., Feb. 25 and Mar. 3, 1860; Colburn's New Mon. Mag., April, 1860; Bentley's Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1860; Edin. Rev., April, 1860, (by H. Merivale.)

The article in the Athen., 1860, i. 229, and Collier's reply to Hamilton, Athen., 1860, i. 237, were republished by Mr. Frederickson, of New York, (see Athen., 1860, i. 826; 1861, i. 53, 434;) and in January, 1861, the editor of the Athen. received for Mr. Collier a silver inkstand, with the inscription:

"Presented to John Payne Collier, Esq., F.S.A., by a Few Friends in America, who appreciate his literary integrity and private worth. New York, November, 1860." See Athen., 1861, i. 53.

594. Reply to Mr. N. E. S. A. Hamilton's Inquiry into the Imputed Shakespeare Forgeries, by J. Payne Collier, 1860, 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 376; Lon. Critic, Mar. 17, 1860; Lon. Lit. Gaz., Mar. 24, 1860.

595. Strictures on Mr. N. E. S. A. Hamilton's Inquiry into the Genuineness of the MS. Corrections in Mr. J. Payne Collier's Annotated Shakespeare Folio 1623, by Scrutator, 1860, 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 269, 341, 826; Lon. Lit. Gaz., June 9, 1860.

The North American Review, April, 1854, 390–423, (Francis Bowen,) and The London Athenæum, (vide 1853 et seq., Indexes,) were among the chief champions of the Corrector and Amender of the mysterious Perkins Folio. The former expressed the belief that "the sure instinct of public taste" would "finally incorporate into the received text far the larger portion of the emendations made by a poor player in the first half of the seventeenth century," (p. 423;) and the latter, whilst admitting that the Folio Corrector was "occasionally puerile, often mistaken," had "no hesitation, after some years' study," in pronouncing him "the most precious acquisition ever made to our means of receiving a genuine Shakspeare text," (1858, i. 559.) On the other hand, Halliwell, Singer, Dyce, Knight, R. G. White, Brae, Hamilton, Hardy, Sir F. Madden, and Ingleby are more or less skeptical both as regards the antiquity and the value of the annotations. Mr. White, whose edition of the poet the Athenæum, 1858, ii. 612, considers to have been benefited by the annotations of The Corrector, remarks, (Athen., 1860, i. 855,) "It seems to me more than probable that most of the many marginal readings in this folio, not peculiar to it, are as spurious in their form as most of the few peculiar to it are, in my judgment, worthless in their essence." Much industry, some logic, and, we regret to add, a vast deal of ill temper, were expended on this discussion. The fruits of the first and perusal of the second were not without advantage to printers and readers; the third profited nobody, and was altogether out of place, for (we again quote Mr. White, ubi supra) "why men should lose their tempers about such purely impersonal questions as whether a certain line should read thus or so, or certain pen and pencil marks were made in the nineteenth century or the seventeenth, I cannot understand."

661. Fac-Similes of the Plots of Old English Plays; being the Original Directions for the Actors, suspended near the Prompter's Station on the Walls of the Fortune Theatre, 1860, fol. Privately printed: J. O. Halliwell.

662. The Mind of Shakspeare as exhibited in his Works; by the Rev. A. A. Morgan, 1860, 12mo; 2d ed., 1861, 12mo.

"The whole book seems to us alike menacing, dreary, and superfluous."—Lon. Athen., 1860, i. 442.

The Lon. Times, Jan. 10, 1860, thinks better of it.

663. Remarks on the Medical Knowledge of Shakespeare; by J. C. Bucknill, M.D., 1860, 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1859, ii. 464, and 1860, i. 713. On this subject the student (medical or literary) must read the paper on Shakspeare's Test of Insanity in Sir Henry Halford's Essays and Orations, 1832, 12mo. See, also, Lon. Quar. Rev., xlix. 181, and lxxxv. 357–71, 380–83, 390, n., 394, n. Dr. Brigham, who for many years devoted himself to the medical care of the insane, remarked that Shakspeare was in himself "as great a psychological curiosity as any case of insanity he had ever met;" and he declared that in the Asylum at Utica, New York, he had seen all of Shakspeare's insane characters:

"We confess, almost with shame," he observes, "that, although near two centuries and a half have passed since Shakspeare wrote King Lear, we have very little to add to his method of treating the insane, as there pointed out."

664. A Brief Hand-List of the Early Quarto Editions of the Plays of Shakespeare, with Notices of the Old Impressions of the Poems; by J. O. Halliwell, 1860, 8vo. Privately printed: 25 copies.

694. Key to Shakespeare's Sonnets; by D. Barnstorff; Translated from the German by T. J. Graham, 1862, 8vo, pp. 220. See Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 137.

695. The Sonnets of William Shakspere: a Critical Disquisition suggested by a Recent Discovery; by Bolton Corney, 1862, 8vo, pp. 16. Privately printed. See EDITIONS OF SHAKSPEARE'S WORKS: SONNETS, supra.

696. Shakespeare No Deerstealer; or, A Short Account of Fulbrooke Park, near Stratford-on-Avon; by C. Holte Bracebride, 1862, 8vo. Privately printed.

697. Catalogue of an Extraordinary Collection of Autograph Letters and two most interesting Shakespearian Documents, &c., 1862, 8vo.

698. The Shakespeare Cyclopædia; being a Classified and Elucidated Summary of Shakespeare's Knowledge of the Works and Phenomena of Nature, 8vo, 20 Parts: No. 1, Zoology: Man; 1862.

699. Shakespeare Commentaries, by Dr. G. C. Gervinus; Translated [from the Second German edition] under the Author's Superintendence, by [Miss] F. E. Bunnett, 1862, 2 vols. demy 8vo.

"The Doctor knows not only all about Shakspeare, but all that has been said about him in Germany and England by every description of critic. . . . The 'Shakespeare' of Gervinus is a massive work, and looks well with a massive name."—Lon. Athen., 1863, i. 9. See, also, 55.

"He is an admirable guide to the genius of the poet, and transcends in his exposition of the plots and the manner of their treatment all the critics that have gone before him."—Lon. Reader, 1863, i. 16.

"The last and crowning effort of German criticism, 'Gervinus's Shakspeare;' a critical and historical work unmatched in the literature of any country for the power of appreciation and the critical acumen which are brought to bear upon the great author under illustration."—FRANZ THIMM: Shakspeariana, 1865, 55.

700. On the Received Text of Shakespeare's Dramatic Writings and its Improvement; by Samuel Bailey, Author of "Letters upon the Philosophy of the Human Mind," (1855–58–63, 3 vols. 8vo,) 1862–66, 2 vols. 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1862, i. 394.

702. Shaksperian Playing Cards, Manches., 1863.

703. Shakespere's Home at New Place, Stratford-upon-Avon, (1490–1759,) &c.; by J. C. M. Bellew, 1863, p. 8vo.

"No additional fact has been brought to light which materially enlarges the small stock of particulars communicated originally by Betterton to Rowe. Mr. Bellew's volume does not advance us a step further."—Lon. Reader, 1863, i. 257.

704. The Shakespeare Treasury of Subject Quotations Synonymously Indexed, by William Hoe, 1863, 12mo.

705. A Study of Hamlet; by John Conolly, M.D., LL.D., 1863, 12mo. Dr. Conolly labours to prove (and Dr. Ray tells us that he concurs in this opinion) that Shakspeare's object was to represent in Hamlet a peculiar and medically-known kind of actual insanity, and that in this he has succeeded to a marvel. Emanating from so distinguished an authority in lunacy, this is one of the highest tributes ever paid to a man the sources of whose multifarious knowledge are as incomprehensible as his genius is transcendent. See MEDICAL OPINIONS UPON SHAKSPEARE, p. 2031, supra.

706. The Forest of Arden: its Towns, Villages, and Hamlets, with Illustrations and Map, by J. Hannett, 1863, cr. 8vo.

712. Miscellanies of the Philobiblon Society, vol. viii.: The Biography and Bibliography of Shakespeare, by Henry G. Bohn, 1863, sq. 4to. 40 copies. This is a reprint, "with a few corrections and additions," of Mr. Bohn's admirable Bibliography of Shakespeare, already noticed, in his edition of Lowndes's Bibliographer's Manual, Part 10, 1863, 2252–2267; with "a bibliographico-chronological Life of Shakespeare as a suitable accompaniment," and 19 plates. G. Daniel, July, 1864, 1507*, £17 5*s*.; J. R. Smith's Cat., Nov. 1867, 989, £10 10*s*. See No. 770.

"This volume, in a very concise form, offers the most complete sketch of our great poet that has yet been written."—Lon Reader, 1864, ii. 193, (q. v.)

See, also, Nos. 393, 412, 456, 712, 770. Bohn's edition of Lowndes's Bibliographer's Manual was published in 11 Parts, p. 8vo, 1857–64, subsequently in 4 vols. half bound; and in 1869 an edition of 100 copies on large paper, r. 8vo, half bound, Roxburghe style, was printed for subscribers. This is a beautiful edition, and must be secured by the bibliographer,—if he can get it; as we did.

Henceforth there will be a proper depository for SHAKSPEARIANA. On the 23d of April, 1868, "The SHAKSPEARE Library," founded at Birmingham, in 1864, as a tercentenary memorial, was formally opened for public use. A library devoted to the works produced and elicited by one man,—this is a monument indeed! But there has been but one such man! Let it be accepted as a truth past all debate, that among the great ones of the earth Shakspeare stands alone,—in unapproachable majesty. What was the secret of his power; from whence derived this marvellous insight into human nature under all circumstances, ages, and climes, this accurate knowledge of sciences, arts, governments, morals, manners, philosophies, and codes, this exquisite command of language,—never wielded with such skill before or since,—by which each character, event, or thought is drawn in lines of living light;—this, the greatest of all human mysteries, which we have received from our fathers, we must transmit, deepened and heightened rather than lessened by our labours, to our children.

Our "SHAKSPEARIANA" alone numbers about one thousand and forty printed volumes and tracts: how many editions of "SHAKSPEARE'S Works," separate and collective, in various languages, we have recorded, we have not taken the trouble to compute. In typographical bulk this article on the great poet, philosopher, and sage would make a duodecimo volume of about 238 pages, type the same size as that in the narrative portion of the New York edition of The Life and Letters of Washington Irving, or the London edition of the Memoirs, &c. of Thomas Moore. The alphabetical INDEX exhibits a brilliant succession of great names,—the names of men who have distinguished themselves in almost every department of knowledge, and who, however diverse their pursuits and tastes, unite in paying willing tribute to the illustrious intellect which has transcended them all.

Shalders, Rev. E. W. Worship God, Lon., 1858, 12mo.

Shaler, William, United States Consul-General at Algiers, and subsequently consul at Havana, where he d. 1833, aged 55, contributed a paper on the Language, &c. of the Berbers in Africa to Amer. Phil. Trans., New Series, vol. ii., and pub. Sketches of Algiers, Boston, 1826, 8vo. Dr. Jared Sparks highly commended this work.

"He has scrutinized deeply, and declared freely, what he discovered, and what he thought."—N. Amer. Rev., xxii. 409–431.

See Saint George, Sir Richard; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1849, ii. 428, (Obituary.)

Sharp, Daniel, D.D., b. at Huddersfield, England, in 1783, emigrated to New York in 1805, became pastor of the Baptist Church at Newark, N.J., 1809, and from 1812 until his death, in 1853, was pastor of the Third (now Charles Street) Baptist Church, Boston, Mass. He pub. seventeen separate Sermons and Discourses, 1824–52; a Tribute to Mr. Ensign Lincoln, 1832; and Recognition of Friends in Heaven, a Discourse, 5th ed., with a Memorial by Rev. John Wayland, Bost., 1857, 8vo. See, also, Sprague's Annals, vi., Baptist, 1860, 565–578; Knickerbocker Mag., xxxiv. 95.

Sharp, G. Confessions of an Attorney, N. York, 1836, 12mo.

Sharp, Granville, 1734–1813, the grandson of an Archbishop of York, the son of an Archdeacon of Northumberland, the father of a Prebendary of Durham, a native of Durham, was bound apprentice to a London linen-draper in 1750, but soon after commenced the study of law, which he did not practise. He obtained a place in the Ordnance Office, which, after several years' occupancy, he resigned in April, 1777, rather than assist in the prosecution of the war against the American colonies. The rest of his life was chiefly devoted to his books, and those philanthropic exertions on behalf of the oppressed, (e.g. the slaves Strong and Somerset,) and the rights of the subject, (the case of the impressment of Millachip, &c.,) which cast such enduring honour on his name. Of his sixty-one publications, principally pamphlets upon theological and political subjects and the evils of slavery, the following are among the most important: 1. Remarks on a Printed Paper entitled A Catalogue of the Sacred Vessels restored by Cyrus, and of the Chief Jews, &c., Lon., 1765, '75, 8vo. Anon.

"Exposes some mistakes of Dr. Kennicott."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 399.

2. Remarks on several very Important Prophecies, in 5 Parts, 1768, '75, 8vo.

"Contain some valuable observations on Isaiah vii. 13, 16, and some other passages."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 399.

3. Short Treatise on the English Tongue, Eng. and French, 1767, 8vo. 4. Slavery in England, 1769, 8vo; with Appendix, 1772, 8vo. 5. Tract on Duelling, 1773, '90, 8vo. 6. Declaration of the People's Natural Rights to a Share in the Legislature, 1774, 8vo; 1775, 8vo.

"This sober, rational, and dispassionate performance."—Lon. Month. Rev.

7. The Just Limitation of Slavery in the Laws of God, 1776, 8vo. 8. The Law of Liberty, 1776, 8vo. 9. The Law of Nature, &c., 1777, 1809, 8vo. 10. Sharp, Richard, M.P., d. 1835, aged 76, leaving £250,000, acquired, in part, by commerce, and a high reputation for critical ability and colloquial powers.

"Conversation Sharp," for such was the name by which he was known in polite circles, the year before his death published anonymously (his only volume) a collection of poems and letters, originally printed in periodicals, with some new pieces, under the title of Letters and Essays in Prose and Verse, Lon., 1834, 12mo, pp. 268; Phila., 1835, 12mo. This volume was warmly commended in the London Quarterly Review, ii. 285–304. Sir James Mackintosh wrote to Sharp, "I think you have produced more effect on my character than any man with whom I have lived," (Sir J. M.'s Life, q. v.,) and declared that he was the best critic he had ever known; and Mr. Hallam introduces him as "my late friend Richard Sharp, whose good taste is well known," (Lit. Hist. of Europe, Part 4, chap. vii., n.)

His large property was divided between his nephews and nieces.

"I read Sharp's Letters on Italy over again when I was at Bath. There is a great deal of matter in them."—DR. JOHNSON: Boswell, chap. lvi.

Johnson's friend Baretti thought there was too much

"matter in them,"—too much censure of his countrymen,—and therefore gave to the world, as a corrective, An Account of the Manners and Customs of Italy, &c., 1768, 2 vols. 8vo. Sharp replied in (4) A View of the Customs, &c. of Italy, &c., 1768, 8vo; and Baretti rejoined in An Appendix in Answer to Mr. Sharp's Reply, 1769, 8vo.

"The dispute was productive of this consequence: it destroyed the reputation of Mr. Sharp's work, which since that time has been totally neglected."—Chalmers's Biog. Dict., iii. 1812, 465, (q. v. for life of Baretti.)

Sharp, Thomas, D.D., son and biographer of Archbishop John Sharp, (q. v.,) and father of Granville Sharp, was b. 1693, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, of which he became Fellow; Rector of Rothbury, 1720; Archdeacon of Northumberland, 1722; d. 1758. Of his excellent charges on The Rubric in the Book of Common Prayer and Canons of the Church of England, &c., 1753, 8vo, again, 1787, 8vo, (styled by Bickersteth "a useful work,") the last two edits. were pub. at Oxford, C. P., 1834, 8vo, 1853, 8vo. Of his other Works a collective edit. was issued, Lon., 1763, 5 vols. 8vo.

"The principal publications of a biblical nature by Dr. Sharp, included in these volumes, are Two Dissertations concerning the Etymology and Scripture Meaning of the Hebrew words Elohim and Berith, [1st ed., 1751, 8vo;] Review of the Two Dissertations, [1st ed., 1755, 8vo;) Defence of the Review; Discourses on the Antiquity of the Hebrew Tongue and Character, [1st ed., 1756, 8vo;) Hutchinson's Exposition of the Cherubim, and his Hypothesis concerning them, Examined, [1st ed., 1756, 8vo.] Sharp was a man of learning and talents, and one of the most determined antagonists of Hutchinsonianism. He was a good scholar, as the above works evince. Julius Bate replied to the Review and Defence of the Dissertations, but not satisfactorily. Dr. [Benjamin] Holloway and Mr. Aboab also appeared as his antagonists."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 400.

Dr. Sharp contributed a paper On a Roman Inscription to Archæol., 1785, vol. vii. 83.

"His Decisions have added all the influence of his rare intellectual attainments to the science of legal jurisprudence. He has erected an imperishable monument in the Books of Reports to his own great fame and to the wisdom of the Law."—Ex-Governor (late Judge) Levi Lincoln, April 1, 1861.

"I think his judicial record will not suffer in comparison with that of any jurist that has honoured the annals of our country."—Judge Clifford, March 30, 1861.

"No subject was so great as to be beyond the reach of his comprehensive grasp; no distinction so nice or minute as to elude his keen and discriminating observation."—Chief-Justice Bigelow, (his successor,) April 9, 1861.

We have extracted these testimonies from a number of publications elicited by his resignation and his death, respectively. Among these are the proceedings of the Executive Council of Massachusetts, and of the Bar of Massachusetts, Sept. 10, 1860, on his resignation; and of the following on his death: Senate of Mass., April 1; Supreme Judicial Court of Mass., April, 1860; Suffolk Bar, April 1 and 9, 1861; Worcester Bar, April 1, 1861; Boston Board of Aldermen, April 2, 1861; Cape Cod Association, April 2, 1861; Mass. Hist. Soc. Proceed., 1860–62, 8vo, 173, 174–77. To these we may add Rev. Dr. Dewey's Funeral Sermon on Judge Shaw, April 2, 1861, and the proceedings of the Essex Bar Association relative to a portrait of the judge, (now in the court-room at Salem, Mass.,) by William M. Hunt, of Newport, R.I., May 9, 1860. See, also, Felt's Memorials of William Smith Shaw, 1852; Loring's Hundred Boston Orators, 1854; Appleton's Amer. Cyc., xiv., (by G. S. Hillard;) N. Amer. His last publication is A Character of the Province of Maryland, &c., by George Alsop; a New Edition, with Copious Historical and Biographical Notes, 1869, 8vo, 500 copies; l. p., 4to, 64 copies. This is No. 5 of W. Gowans's Bibliotheca Americana. He has also contributed to the Government works on the History and Progress of the Indian Tribes, to the Collections of the New York and Wisconsin Historical Societies, the Historical Magazine, Putnam's Monthly Magazine, the U. S. Catholic Magazine, the Metropolitan, and to many of the Roman Catholic papers, especially the Boston Pilot and St. Louis Leader; edited The Catholic Almanac, and Frank Leslie's Illustrated Paper; and from 1859 to 1865 conducted the (N. York) Historical Magazine. He has been for some time engaged upon a work which we hope will not long be withheld from the public, viz., The Catholic Authors of America, with Selections, Biographical Sketches, and Portraits. A Life of Archbishop Hughes projected by him has been forestalled by another author.

Shebbeare, John, M D., 1709–88, a native of Bideford, Devonshire, lived for many years in London as a political Tory writer, and pub. thirty-four books and pamphlets, of which at least thirty are now forgotten. We notice: 1. New Analysis of the Bristol Waters, Lon., 1740, 4to. 2. The Marriage Act; a Political Novel, 1754. The strictures on Parliament in this book caused him to be imprisoned. 3. Letters on the English Nation, by Battista Angeloni, a Jesuit, who resided many Years in London; trans. from the Original Italian by the Author of The Marriage Act, 1755, 2 vols. 8vo; 1756, 2 vols. 8vo. The only "Jesuit" in the case was Shebbeare himself.

"He deserves to be remembered as a respectable name in literature, were it only for his admirable 'Letters on the English Nation,' under the name of 'Battista Angeloni, a Jesuit.'"—Boswell: Life of Johnson, year 1781.

4. Practice of Physic, 1755, 2 vols. 8vo. 5. Lydia; or, Filial Piety, a Novel, 1755, 4 vols. 12mo, 1769, 2 vols. 12mo; 1786, 4 vols. 8vo. 6. Letters to the People of England, Nos. 1–7, 1756–57, 8vo. Some copies of the 7th Letter were seized; and for the attacks on Government in the preceding Letters, Shebbeare was fined, pilloried, and imprisoned. The pillory is thus cruelly alluded to:

"Witness, ye Hills, ye Johnsons, Scots, Shebbeares, Hark to my call, for some of you have ears."
Heroic Epistle: see Croker's Boswell, Index.

But his ears were uninjured: indeed, Beardmore, the under-sheriff, Shebbeare's old coadjutor in the Monitor, was fined and imprisoned for his lenity to the doctor. Boswell (if his allusion was to Shebbeare) thought he "was not dishonoured by it."

"Johnson.—'Ay, but he was, sir. He could not mouth and strut about as he used to do, after having been there. People are not willing to ask a man to their tables who has stood in the pillory.'"—Boswell's Johnson, year 1778.

7. Hist. of the Excellence and Decline of the Constitution, &c. of the Sumatrans, 1760, 2 vols. in 1, 8vo. Some copies are s. a., and one copy, at least, is dated 1763. The "Sumatrans" are the English, and their Constitution is satirically treated. 8. Answer to the Queries contained in a Letter to Dr. Shebbeare, &c., 1775, 8vo. This Answer "contains the essence of all the libels published against William III. and the Whig and Presbyterian parties."

"It would be endless to point out the instances in which the author hath justly laid himself open to severe censure."—Lon. Month. Rev., 1775, 34.

9. An Answer to the Printed Speech of Edmund Burke, Esq., April 19, 1774, 1774, 8vo.

"Slanderous invectives, coarse witticisms, vulgar obscene allusions, and scandalous epithets."—Lon. Month. Rev., 1775, 551.

10. An Essay, &c. on National Society, in which the Principles of Government, &c. contained in Dr. Price's Observations, &c. are Fairly Examined and Refuted, 1776, 8vo. See Price, Richard, D.D., No. 8.

"His reasoning is often founded on misrepresentations and untruths; his language is frequently intemperate, foul, and opprobrious; his humour is often coarse, low, and indelicate."—Lon. Month. Rev., 1776, 241.

The Doctor's reputation has not improved with time. Lord Macaulay calls him (Essay on the Earl of Chatham) "a wretched scribbler," (see, also, Irving's Goldsmith, 189; Whipple's Lectures, 35,) and is indignant that he should have been "honoured with a mark of royal approbation similar to that which was bestowed on the author of the English Dictionary, of the Vanity of Human Wishes."

This error of judgment was more easily pardoned by the wits of that day, as it enabled them to complain that "the King had pensioned a She-bear and a He-bear." Smollett introduced him under the name of Ferret in the novel of Sir Launcelot Greaves; Hogarth made him one of the group in his third Election print; and the periodicals found him profitable as a stock subject of ridicule and reproach. But "none of these things moved him," so long as he could find reviews to write at six guineas per sheet (Boswell's Johnson, year 1783) and enemies to abuse at three shillings per pamphlet. A biographical notice of him appeared in the European Magazine for 1788, which was republished separately, and partially transferred to Chalmers's Biog. Dict., xxvii. 430–434. See, also, Encyc. Brit., and Cunningham's Biog. Hist. of Eng., v. 389–94.

Shee, Sir George. On the Construction of Ships, Trans. Irish Acad., 1794, vol. vi.

Shee, Sir Martin Archer, Knt., D.C.L., a descendant of the Princes O'Shee of Kerry and Tipperary, was b. at Dublin, Dec. 23, 1770, emigrated to London, was there introduced by Edmund Burke to Reynolds, and became a contributor to the Exhibition in 1789; elected an Associate to the Royal Academy, 1798, an Academician, 1800, and President and knighted, 1830; d. at Brighton, August 19, 1850. As a portrait-painter he cannot be called more than second-rate; as a poet—Lord Byron to the contrary notwithstanding—he will hardly rank so high. 1. Rhymes on Art; or, The Remonstrance of a Painter, in Two Parts; with Notes and a Preface; including Strictures, &c., Lon., 1805, 8vo; 2d ed., 1805; 3d ed., 1806, 12mo.

"Upon the whole, we think very well both of Mr. Shee's cause and of his talents."—J. Thompson: Edin. Rev., April, 1806, 213–22.

2. Elements of Art; a Poem, in Six Cantos; with Notes and a Preface; including Strictures, &c., 1809, 8vo.

"Upon the whole, the notes form the most valuable part of the work."—Lon. Quar. Rev., May, 1810, 407–17.

Lord Byron refers to Shee's Rhymes and Elements in warmer terms:

> "And here let Shee and genius find a place, > Whose pen and pencil yield an equal grace," &c.

In the Preface he attacks Colman, who refused to license the play for the stage, on account of some lines calculated, as C. thought, to encourage sedition. Thereupon Shee published it,—to his no small profit:

"Shee told us he had got five hundred guineas for the copyright of his rejected play. Abbot, in coming away with me in a hackney-coach, remarked how lucky Shee was."—Memoirs, &c. of T. Moore, iv. 1853, 161.

"One word more about Sir Martin Shee. At the first Academy dinner at which he took the chair as President, Lord Holland and Lord Grey sat next each other. After Shee's first address to the company, Lord Holland said to his neighbour, 'I never heard a better speech.' 'And I,' said Lord Grey, 'never heard so good a one.'"—C. R. Leslie: *Autobiog. Sheffield, John, b. 1649, became Earl of Mulgrave, by the death of his father, 1658; dismissed his tutor and commenced—or, at least, planned—self-education, in his twelfth year; took service on board a man-of-war when seventeen; was summoned to Parliament, but excluded on account of nonage, at eighteen, and subsequently acquired distinction in military employments; created Marquis of Normanby, 1694; Duke of Normanby and Buckinghamshire, 1703; Lord Chamberlain of the Household, 1710; embraced the opposition on the accession of George I.; died Feb. 24, 1720–1. By the death of his son Edmond, in 1735, the line of Sheffield became extinct.

1. An Essay upon Poetry, Lon., 1682, 4to. In English and Latin, by John Norris, 1691. In French, by M. Trocheran, Paris, 1749, 12mo.

"His Essay on Poetry is the great work for which he was praised by Roscommon, Dryden, and Pope, and doubtless by many more whose eulogies have perished. . . . The precepts are judicious, sometimes new, and often happily expressed; but there are, after all the emendations, many weak lines, and some strange appearances of negligence. . . . His verses are often insipid; but his memoirs are lively and agreeable: he had the perspicuity and elegance of an historian, but not the fire and fancy of a poet."—Dr. Johnson: Lives of the Poets, Cunningham's ed., 1854, ii. 197, 198, (q. v.)

2. "Castrations;" containing an Account of the Revolution in 1688, 8vo. 3. Letter to Dr. Tillotson, Lon., 1689, fol. 4. Poëmata Lat. reddita a Gul. Hogæo, 1695, 4to. 5. Julius Cæsar, 1722, 4to. 6. Marius Brutus, 1727, 4to. Nos. 5 and 6 are altered from Shakspeare. His Works were pub. in 1723, 2 vols. 4to, (vol. i., poetry, vol. ii., prose;) 1726, 2 vols. 12mo; 1729, 2 vols. 8vo; 1740, 2 vols. 8vo.

"It is certain that his grace's compositions in prose have nothing extraordinary in them; his poetry is most indifferent; and the greatest part of both is already fallen into total neglect."—Horace Walpole: R. and N. Authors, Park's ed., iv. 90, (q. v.)

"I can recollect no performance of Buckingham that stamps him a true genius; his reputation was owing to his rank."—Joseph Warton: Essay on Pope.

The highest compliment paid to his Essay on Satire was the beating procured by Rochester for Dryden on suspicion of his being the author of it; and a portion of it has been confidently ascribed to him; but this presumption some eminent modern critics will by no means admit:

"I cannot think that any part of the 'Essay on Satire' received additions from Dryden's pen. Probably he might contribute a few hints for revision; but the author of 'Absalom and Achitophel' could never completely disguise the powers which were shortly to produce that brilliant satire. Dryden's verses must have shone among Mulgrave's as gold beside copper. The whole Essay is a mere stagnant level, no one part of it so far rising above the rest as to bespeak the work of a superior hand. The thoughts, even when conceived with some spirit, are clumsily and unhappily brought out,—a fault never to be traced in the beautiful language of Dryden, whose powers of expression were at least equal to his force of conception."—Sir Walter Scott: Life of Dryden: Miscell. Prose Works.

Sheil, Lady, wife of Sir Justin Sheil, K.C.B., late Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from Great Britain to Persia, and younger brother of the Rt. Hon. Richard Lalor Sheil, M.P., (infra.) Glimpses of Life and Manners in Persia; with Notes on Russia, Koords, Toorkomans, Nestorians, Khiva, and Persia, Lon., 1856, p. 8vo.

"A lively narrative. . . . The Minister has added notes and appendix containing much interesting information."—Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1857: Persia, (q. v.) See, also, Fraser's Mag., 1856, (same in Bost. Liv. Age, li. 449.)

Sheil, Rt. Hon. Richard Lalor, M.P., b. in Dublin, 1793; was educated at the Jesuit College of Stonyhurst, Lancashire, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated with distinction; called to the Irish Bar, 1814; became an active member of the Catholic Association, 1822; returned to Parliament for Anglesey's borough of Milborne Port, 1829, and again in 1830, for Louth in 1832, and for Tipperary in 1832, 1835, and 1837–41; a Commissioner of Greenwich Hospital, 1838; Vice-President of the Board of Trade, and a Privy Councillor, 1839; Judge-Advocate General, June–Sept. 1841; M.P. for Dungarvan, 1841–50; Master of the Mint, 1846 to November, 1850; and from that time until his death, at Florence, May 23, 1851, British Minister at the Court of Tuscany. In early life Mr. Sheil acquired considerable reputation as the author of the tragedies Adelaide, The Apostate, Bellamira, Evadne, and The Huguenot. Of Adelaide (Dubl., 1814, 8vo; 2d ed., Lon., 1816) a review will be found in Lon. Month. Rev., lxxxiv. 236; of The Apostate (1817, 8vo) notices occur in Lon. Month. Rev., lxxxiv. 239, and Lon. Quar. Rev., xvii. 248. Evadne, the most successful, (largely indebted to Shirley's Traitor,) appeared in 1820. Neither of the critiques just referred to is complimentary. That the acting of Miss O'Neil, with an eye to which Sheil especially exerted his genius, contributed greatly to the fame of the dramatist, is not to be questioned.

"There is much vigour of language, force of character, and originality of incident about his dramas: he is earnest, fervent, and impassioned; he is also unequal, and sometimes improbable. All the grand elements of the drama seem in him; he has made a poor exchange, so far as fame is concerned, in preferring, like Sheridan, to move the House of Commons rather than agitate the audience in Old Drury."—Allan Cunningham: Biog. and Crit. Hist., &c., 1833.

As an orator, Sheil's reputation has certainly not gained; and it is the judgment of one of the most intelligent of modern critics (see Dr. R. S. Mackenzie's edition of Noctes Ambrosianæ, iii. 208, n.) that he was never equal to O'Connell. His Speeches, with a Memoir by T. MacNevin, were pub., Lon., 1845, 8vo; again, 1846, '47, '54, '56, and '60. Since his death have appeared: 2. Sheil's Sketches of the Irish Bar, [originally contributed to New Monthly Magazine;] Edited, with Notes, by R. Shelton Mackenzie, N. York, 1854, 2 vols. 12mo; 3d ed., 2 vols. "Mrs. Shelley is very clever: indeed, it would be difficult for her not to be so: the daughter of Mary Wollstonecraft and the wife of Godwin could be no common person."—LORD BYRON: Countess of Blessington's Conversations with Lord Byron, in Bost., 1859, 100.

Shelley, Percy Bysshe, b. at Field Place, near Horsham, Sussex, August 4, 1792, drowned by the capsizing of his boat in the Mediterranean, between Leghorn and the Bay of Spezia, July, 1822, was the eldest son of Sir Timothy Shelley, and a descendant of one of the followers of William of Normandy whose name is recorded on the roll of Battle Abbey. The head of this ancient family is Sir John Villiers Shelley, born in 1808, now (1869) in his 61st or 62d year. The head of the branch to which our author belonged is Sir Percy Florence Shelley, Baronet, son of the poet and his second wife, (supra,) who was born at Florence in 1819, and succeeded his grandfather in the title and estates in 1844. The poet's paternal great-grandfather, Timothy, emigrated to Newark, New Jersey, where he married an American wife, and where Shelley's grandfather, Bysshe, was born. After preparatory tuition at Sion House, near Brantford, the subject of our notice in 1805 removed to Eton, there dreamed and studied for three years, and in 1810 was entered at University College, Oxford. But he had now been for some years an author: whilst at home in 1808 he completed two romances commenced at Eton,—Zastrozzi, and St. Irvyne, or The Rosicrusian. They were published anonymously, and condemned. About this time, also, he assisted Captain Medwin in the composition of a poem which was condemned without being published,—Ahasuerus, or The Wandering Jew;—declined by Campbell (New Monthly Magazine) on the ground that it had only two good lines in it. Four cantos, however, many years later gained admittance into Fraser's Magazine, (vol. iii. 529, 666, 1831:) see, also, MEDWIN, THOMAS, R.A., No. 3.

He had not been long at Oxford before he published an anonymous volume of poems, entitled Posthumous Poems of my Aunt Margaret Nicholson. This, like the preceding publications, was soon forgotten, (indeed, they can hardly be said to have been ever known;) but about a year later he unfortunately printed at London a pamphlet destined to an unhappy prominence and a baleful influence on his future life,—A Defence of Atheism. This, it is alleged, was simply intended as a challenge to debate, and copies were forwarded to the heads of the colleges with a view to their preparation for dialectical exercise. The invitation, however, was declined; and the youthful polemic, neither denying nor admitting the authorship of the obnoxious thesis, was in March, 1811, expelled from the University. Instead of profiting by this admonition, he employed his leisure hours in London—for his father would not at first permit him to return home—in completing what he should never have begun,—the impious rhapsody of Queen Mab. In August, 1811, he was received into the paternal mansion; and, though certainly possessing little in common with his father in the way of tastes and cultivation, here he might have resided at his ease, absorbed in his books, the contemplation of nature, and the exercise of his rare powers of imagination and expression; but the same month which witnessed his return saw him, after less than half a dozen interviews, the husband, through the rites of Gretna Green, of Miss Harriet Westbrooke, the daughter of a retired hotel-keeper. Such matches are not always unhappy,—paternal tradition to the contrary notwithstanding: this was very unhappy; and in June, 1814, the bride, who had about three months before been formally remarried, in England, to Shelley, returned to her father. The same year Shelley started for the Continent in company with Mary Wollstonecraft, the daughter of William Godwin and Mary Wollstonecraft, to whom he was subsequently married. (See SHELLEY, MARY WOLLSTONECRAFT, supra.) In 1815 Shelley's father, in virtue of a business arrangement, agreed to allow his son £800 per annum,—a sum much more than sufficient for his own wants: but the poet was one of the most generous of mortals, and a man of his character seldom lacks opportunities for beneficence. It was in this year that he wrote his beautiful poem of Alastor; or, The Spirit of Solitude. In November, 1816, Mrs. Shelley committed suicide by drowning, leaving two children (a daughter, b. 1813, and a son, b. 1814 or 1815, d. 1826) by the poet; and these Mr. Westbrooke, the grandfather, refused to part with, upon the ground that the father was not a person likely either by precept or example to instil virtuous principles into youthful minds. The case was brought into Chancery, and in March, 1817, Lord-Chancellor Eldon decided that the grandfather should retain the children. Instead of opening any argument, in this place, on the justice or injustice of this decision, we think it sufficient, and much fairer, to refer the reader to Lord Eldon's Decision as recorded in Jacob's Reports, 267, Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxix. 193, 200, 210, and the biographical accounts of Shelley to be cited hereafter. Our author now left for the Continent, and in Switzerland formed that intimacy with Lord Byron to which we have alluded in our notice of his lordship in this Dictionary, (vide p. 321.)

In 1817 Shelley returned to England, and for nearly a year resided at Marlow, Buckinghamshire, where, at the sacrifice of time, money, domestic comfort, literary ease, and suffering under an attack of ophthalmia, he acted the part of a good Samaritan among the poor people of his neighbourhood. His leisure hours were devoted to the composition of The Revolt of Islam, and a part of Rosalind and Helen,—finished at Lucca in 1818. It was in March, 1818, that he gazed for the last time upon the shores of his native land. Three acts of Prometheus Unbound were composed whilst wandering in Italy, ("upon the mountainous ruins of the Baths of Caracalla," &c.;) the fourth act was added at Florence in the latter part of 1819; and it was whilst at Rome, a few months earlier, that he made his translation of Plato's Symposium. In the same year he wrote The Cenci, The Masque of Anarchy, and The Witch of Atlas; in 1820, The Sensitive Plant, Julian and Maddolo, (Shelley and Byron,) and some smaller pieces; in 1821, Epipsychidion Adonais, (vide KEATS, JOHN, p. 1010, supra,) and Hellas, a contribution to the cause of Grecian independence.

The last eighteen months of his life were passed in daily intercourse with Lord Byron; and his lordship's poetry seems to have profited by this companionship. In June, 1822, he was residing at Lerici, a town on the coast of the Bay of Spezia. On the 30th of that month, in company with his friend Captain Williams and one seaman, he set sail, in an open boat, to welcome Leigh Hunt, who had arrived at Leghorn.

"On Monday, the 8th of July," writes Mr. Trelawny, "they got under way to return home, having on board a quantity of household articles, four hundred dollars, a small canoe, and some books and manuscripts. At half-past twelve they made all sail out of the harbour, with a light and favourable breeze, steering direct for Spezia. I had likewise weighed anchor to accompany them a few miles out in Lord Byron's schooner, the Bolivar; but there was some demur about papers from the guard-boat, and they, fearful of losing the breeze, sailed without me. I re-anchored, and watched my friends till their boat became a speck on the horizon, which was growing thick and dark with heavy clouds moving rapidly and gathering in the southwest quarter. I then retired to the cabin, where I had not been half an hour before a man on deck told me a heavy squall had come on. . . . Becoming greatly alarmed for the safety of the voyagers, a note was despatched to Mr. Shelley's house at Lerici, the reply to which stated that nothing had been heard of him and his friend; which augmented our fears to such a degree that couriers were despatched on the whole line of coast from Leghorn to Nice, to ascertain if they had put in anywhere, or if there had been any wreck, or indications of losses by sea. I immediately started for Via Reggio, having lost sight of the boat in that direction. My worst fears were almost confirmed, on my arrival there, by news that a small canoe, two empty water-barrels, and a bottle had been found on the shore, which things I recognized as belonging to the boat. I had still, however, warm hopes that these articles had been thrown overboard to clear them from useless lumber in the storm; and it seemed a general opinion that they had missed Leghorn and put into Elba or Corsica, as nothing more was heard for eight days. This state of suspense becoming intolerable, I returned from Spezia to Via Reggio, where my worst fears were confirmed by the information that two bodies had been washed on shore, one on that night very near the town, which, by the dress and stature, I knew to be Mr. Shelley's. Mr. Keats's last volume of 'Lamia,' 'Isabella,' &c. being open in the jacket-pocket confirmed it beyond a doubt. The body of Mr. Williams was subsequently found near a tower on the Tuscan shore, about four miles from his companion. Both the bodies were greatly decomposed by the sea, but identified beyond a doubt. The seaman, Charles Vivian, was not found for nearly three weeks afterwards. His body was interred on the spot on which a wave had washed it, in the vicinity of Massa."

The bodies of Williams and Shelley (save Shelley's heart, which remained unconsumed by the fire) were burnt, according to the requisitions of the Quarantine laws of Tuscany: the ashes of Williams were sent to England; those of the poet were deposited in the Protestant burial-ground at Rome, so beautifully described in Adonais as the last resting-place of the mourner's friend, Keats. Lord Byron superintended the sad ceremony, and a few months later (in April, 1823) he thus referred to Shelley and his death:

"'You should have known Shelley,' said Byron, 'to feel how much I must regret him. He was the most gentle, most amiable, and least worldly-minded person I ever met; full of delicacy, disinterested beyond all other men, and possessing a degree of genius, joined to a simplicity as rare as it is admirable. He had formed to himself a beau-idéal of all that is fine, high-minded, and noble, and he acted up to this ideal even to the very letter. He had a most brilliant imagination, but a total want of worldly wisdom. I have seen nothing like him, and never shall again, I am certain. I never can forget the night that his poor wife rushed into my room at Pisa, with a face as pale as marble, and terror impressed on her brow, demanding, with all the tragic impetuosity of grief and alarm, where was her husband? Vain were all our efforts to calm her; a desperate sort of courage seemed to give her energy to confront the horrible fate that awaited her: it was the courage of despair. I have seen nothing in tragedy or on the stage so powerful, or so affecting, as her appearance; and it often presents itself to my memory. I knew nothing then of the catastrophe, but the vividness of her terror communicated itself to me, and I feared the worst,—which fears were, alas! too soon fearfully realized.'"—Countess of Blessington's Convers. with Lord Byron.

According to Mr. Trelawny's Recollections, his lordship was no loser by Shelley's "simplicity" and "total want of worldly wisdom." Let us now consider his productions:

1. Queen Mab, 1813, 8vo: privately printed without a title-page, 1821, 8vo: surreptitiously published, and the issue disavowed by the author in a letter to the Examiner, (q. v.,) with Notes, Lon., 1821, 8vo; 1829, 8vo. Notices of this incongruous mixture of poetry, profanity, and nonsense will be found in Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1821, 305; Lon. Athen., 1832, 473, n.; Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxix. 193, 210, lxv. 516. See, also, Reply to the Anti-Matrimonial Hypothesis and supposed Atheism of Percy Bysshe Shelley, as laid down in Queen Mab, 1821, 8vo, pp. iv., 76. It is sufficient to say of Queen Mab that it is an effusion which no man should have written, no publisher should circulate, and no family library should contain. The legal proceedings connected with its late republication, and Sir T. N. Talfourd's speech on this subject, are familiar to many of our readers.

The following Preface to recent editions of Shelley's Poetical Works displays a degree of hardihood which may well excite our "special wonder."

"At my request, the Publisher has restored omitted passages of Queen Mab. I now present this edition as a complete collection of my husband's Poetical Works, and I do not foresee that I can hereafter add to, or take away, a word or line."—MRS. SHELLEY.

"Would"—as Ben Jonson said of Shakspeare—"would you had blotted a thousand!" Truly, "the evil that men do lives after them."

2. Alastor; or, The Spirit of Solitude; and other Poems, 1816, cr. 8vo. Reviewed in Blackw. Mag., vi. 148. 3. "We Pity the Plumage, but Forget the Dying Bird:" an Address to the People on the Death of the Princess Charlotte, by the Hermit of Marlow, no imprint, (1817,) 8vo, pp. 16. Privately printed. 4. History of a Six Weeks' Tour through a Part of France, Switzerland, &c., (anon.,) Lon., 1817, 12mo; again, Lumley, s. a. 5. Laon and Cythna; or, The Revolution of the Golden City; a Vision of the Nineteenth Century, in the Stanza of Spenser, 1818, 8vo; again, 8vo, and 1829, 8vo. Immediately recalled, and, with some alterations, issued as The Revolt of Islam; a Poem, in Twelve Cantos, 1818, 8vo. Reviewed with great severity in Lon. Quar. Rev., xxi. 460. The reviewer (erroneously supposed by Shelley to be Robert Southey: see Southey's Life and Corresp., chap. xxv., and Shelley Memorials, 1859) was attacked by Blackw. Mag., vi. 153, and in that periodical, vol. iv. 475, will be found an elaborate critique on the poem:

"His praise," remarks his reviewer, "is, in our judgment, that of having poured over his narrative a very rare strength and abundance of poetic imagery and feeling,—of having steeped every word in the essence of his inspiration."

See, also, Hunt's Foliage, and National Magazine.

6. Rosalind and Helen, with other Poems, 1819, 8vo; 1823, 8vo. See Blackw. Mag., v. 268, and vi. 148. 7. The Cenci; a Tragedy, in Five Acts, 1819, 8vo; 2d ed.,

1820, (some 1821,) 8vo. We have already expressed our disapproval of the revival of this shameful story, (see MONTI, LUIGI, No. 3.) The great power with which it is dramatized by Shelley is therefore deeply to be regretted. In the name of decency, morality, and religion, is there not enough that is "pure, lovely, and of good report," wherewith to entertain our leisure hours, without exhuming these abominations of the past? See Blackw. Mag., lxx. 505.

Sir John Simeon has recently (1860) privately printed for antiquaries (not splendidly published for family libraries, as is Shelley's poetical version) a contemporary account, in Italian, of the murder of Cenci and the execution of his wife and children.

8. Prometheus Unbound; a Lyrical Drama; and other Poems, 1820, (some 1821,) 8vo; again, Hunt & Co., 9*s.*, with Illustrations by J. N. Paton, 1844, ob. 4to.

"Read it through without stopping, and then re-read various passages, and admired and wondered at the performance. . . . One is confounded at the author's mixture of good and bad taste. . . . The extraordinary profanity with which he introduces the most sacred subject has at once and completely annihilated the poem, so far as the public generally are concerned." —Portfolio of a Man of the World, June, 1823: Lon. Gent. Mag., Feb. 1848, 150.

See, also, reviews in Lon. Quar. Rev., xxvi. 168; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1820, 580; and Blackw. Mag., vii. 679.

9. Adonais; an Elegy on the Death of John Keats, author of Endymion, &c., Pisa, Didot's types, 1821, sm. 4to, pp. 25; 2d ed., Camb., 1829, 8vo, pp. 28. See Blackw. Mag., x. 696; same in Maginn's Odoherty Papers, ii. 190.

10. Epipsychidion: Verses addressed to the Noble and Unfortunate Lady now imprisoned in the Convent of ——, 1821, 8vo, pp. 31. Since his death have appeared: 11. Poetical Pieces, C. and J. Ollier, 1823, 8vo. 12. Posthumous Poems, 1824, 8vo; 1841, 8vo. See Lon. Quar. Rev., xxxiv. 136. 13. The Masque of Anarchy; a Poem; with Preface by Leigh Hunt, 1832, 12mo. 14. Poetical Works, 1836, 32mo. 15. Poetical Works; Edited by [his widow] Mrs. M. W. Shelley, with Notes, 1839, 4 vols. 12mo. See Lon. Athen., 1839, 313, 939. Minor Poems, 1846, 24mo; again, 1847, 24mo. American editions of his Poetical Works have been published: N. York, 8vo; Phila., 1851, 8vo; 1855, cr. 8vo; Bost., 1853, 12mo; with Memoir by J. R. Lowell, Bost., Little, B. & Co.'s Brit. Poets, 1855, 3 vols. 18mo; also, 1857; Little, Brown & Co.'s Green and Gold Edition, with Lowell's Memoir, 1864, 3 vols. 32mo, and their edition with Memoir by Charles E. Norton, (a reprint of Mrs. Shelley's ed. of 1839,) 3 vols. 16mo. 16. Essays and Letters from Abroad, Translations, and Fragments; Edited by Mrs. M. W. Shelley, Lon., 1840, 2 vols. p. 8vo; 1847, med. 8vo; 1852, 2 vols. fp. 8vo; Bost., 1840, 2 vols. 12mo. See Lon. Athen., 1839, 939, 982. Also, 1840, 2 vols. 8vo and 2 vols. p. 8vo; 1845, r. 8vo; 1852, 2 vols. 12mo. 17. Relics of Shelley; Edited by Richard Garnett, 1862, fp. 8vo. See Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 10.

The publishers of Shelley's Works (Messrs. Edward Moxon & Co., 44, Dover Street, London) issue them in the following forms:

I. Poems, Essays, and Letters from Abroad; Edited by Mrs. Shelley; with Portrait and Vignette, med. 8vo, 12*s.*

II. Poetical Works; Edited by Mrs. Shelley, 3 vols. fp. 8vo, 15*s.*; red. to 12*s.*, 1869.

III. Essays, Letters from Abroad, Translations, and Fragments; Edited by Mrs. Shelley, 2 vols. fp. 8vo, 9*s.*

IV. Poetical Works; with Portrait and Vignette, fp. 8vo, 7*s.* Last ed., 1869.

There are also Shelley's Poetical Works, Halifax, Miller & S., 1865, fp. 8vo; Shelley's Queen Mab and other Poems, Halifax, Miller & S., 1865, 32mo; the Beauties of Shelley's Poetical Works, 1830, 12mo; 4th ed., 1832, 18mo; The Genius of Shelley, with Selections from his Poetry and a Sketch of Shelley, 1840, r. 32mo; Shelley Papers, with Memoirs, (see MEDWIN, THOMAS, R.A., No. 3,)—which Lady Shelley denominates "a book full of errors," (Shelley Memorials: see, also, Lon. Athen., 1833, 782; 1847, 971, 1002;) Gems from Shelley, Illustrated: An Ode to the Wild West Wind, and The Question; 12 Floral Subjects, poems printed in gold, 1859, fol. 18. Shelley Memorials, from Authentic Sources; Edited by Lady Shelley: to which is added an Essay on Christianity, by P. B. Shelley, 1859, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1859 p. 8vo; 3d ed., 1862, p. 8vo; Bost., 1859, 16mo; 2d ed., 1860. Among the contents are a Letter from Shelley to Lord Ellenborough; New Correspondence of Shelley with William Godwin, Keats, Horace Smitz, Ollier, his publisher, and others; and Extracts from the Private Journal of Mrs. Shelley after the death of the poet. See Lon. Athen., 1859, ii. 139; N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1859, (by A. P. Peabody;) Presb. Quar. Rev., Jan. 1860. In 1852 much interest was excited by the publication of Letters of Percy Bysshe Shelley, with an Introduction by Robert Browning, p. 8vo. The interest, however, declined—naturally enough—when the Letters proved to be forgeries. See the history of the affair, so far as known, in Lon. Athen., 1852, 214, 278, 301, 325, 355, 381, 431; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1852, 173, 205, 230, 239, 241, 254, 279; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1852, i. 378; Westm. Rev., N. S., i. 502.

The compiler was stupid enough to borrow a part of one of his "genuine Letters" from an article of Sir Francis Palgrave's in Lon. Quar. Rev., Sept. 1840, 313–54, on The Fine Arts in Florence.

"The Odes to the Skylark and The Cloud, in the opinion of many critics, bear a purer poetical stamp than any other of his productions. They were written as his mind prompted, listening to the carolling of the bird aloft in the azure sky of Italy, or marking the cloud as it sped across the heavens, while he floated in his boat on the Thames. No poet was ever warmed by a more genuine and unforced inspiration. His extreme sensibility gave the intensity of passion to his intellectual pursuits, and rendered his mind keenly alive to every perception of outward objects, as well as to his internal sensations. Such a gift is, among the sad vicissitudes of human life, the disappointments we meet, and the galling sense of our own mistakes and errors, fraught with pain: to escape from such, he delivered up his soul to poetry, and felt happy when he sheltered himself from the influence of human sympathies in the wildest regions of fancy."—Mrs. Shelley: Pref. to Shelley's Poet. Works.

"It is needless to disguise the fact, and it accounts for all—his mind was diseased: he never knew, even from boyhood, what it was to breathe the atmosphere of healthy life, to have the mens sana in corpore sano. His sensibilities were over-acute; his morality was thoroughly morbid; his metaphysical speculations illogical, incongruous, incomprehensible—alike baseless and objectless. The suns and systems of his universe were mere nebulæ; his continents were a chaos of dead matter; his oceans 'a world of waters, and without a shore.' . . . It is gratuitous absurdity to call his mystical speculations a search after truth; they are no such thing, and are as little worth the attention of reasoning and responsible man as the heterogeneous reveries of nightmare."—D. M. Moir: Sketches of the Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Century, 3d ed., 1856, 231, 232.

"Percy Bysshe Shelley was a man of far superior powers to Keats. He had many of the faculties of a great poet. He was, however, we verily believe it now, scarcely in his right mind."—Prof. John Wilson: Blackw. Mag., Jan. 1826, Pref., xxvii.

"He has the art of using the stateliest words and the most learned idioms without incurring the charge of pedantry, so that passages of more splendid and sonorous writing are not to be selected from any writer since the days of Milton; and yet, when he descends from his ideal worlds, and comes home to us in our humble bowers, and in yearning after love and affection, he attunes the most natural feelings to a style so proportionate, and withal to a modulation so truly musical, that there is nothing to surpass it in the lyrics of Beaumont and Fletcher."—Leigh Hunt.

"I can no more understand Shelley than you can. His poetry is thin-sown with profit or delight. . . . For his theories and nostrums, they are oracular enough, but I either comprehend 'em not, or there is 'miching malice' and mischief in 'em; but, for the most part, ringing with their own emptiness. Hazlitt said well of 'em, 'Many are the wiser or better for reading Shakspeare, but nobody was ever wiser or better for reading Shelley.'"—Charles Lamb to Bernard Barton, August, 1824: Talfourd's Lamb.

"Shelley's poetry was icy cold to him, [Charles Lamb,] except one or two of the minor poems, in which he could not help admiring the exquisite beauty of the expression."—Sir T. N. Talfourd's Character of Lamb.

"Many of his contemporaries, and nearly all the poetical writers of any eminence since his time, bear visible traces of how much they imbued themselves with Shelley's poetry. I will mention, as instances of this, Keats, Miss Landon, Moncktoh Milnes, Browning, and Tennyson. No one, indeed, who is unacquainted with Shelley can be aware of the full richness and melody of our language."—Sir E. S. Creasy: Etonians: Percy Bysshe Shelley, 1850.

"The strong imagination of Shelley made him an idolater in his own despite. Out of the most indefinite terms of a hard, cold, dark, metaphysical system, he made a gorgeous Pantheon, full of beautiful, majestic, and life-like forms. He turned atheism itself into a mythology, rich with visions as glorious as the gods that live in the marble of Phidias, or the Virgin saints that smile on us from the canvas of Murillo. The Spirit of Beauty, the Principle of Good, the Principle of Evil, when he treated of them, ceased to be abstractions. They took shape and colour. They were no longer mere words, but 'intelligible forms,' 'fair humanities,' objects of love, of adoration, or of fear. As there can be no stronger sign of a mind destitute of the poetical faculty than that tendency which was so common among the writers of the French school to turn images into abstractions,—Venus, for example, into Love, Minerva into Wisdom, Mars into War, and Bacchus into festivity,—so there can be no stronger sign of a mind truly poetical than a disposition to reverse this abstracting process, and to make individuals out of generalities. Some of the metaphysical and ethical theories of Shelley were certainly most absurd and pernicious. But we doubt whether any modern poet has possessed in an equal degree the highest qualities of the great ancient masters. The words bard and inspiration, which seem so cold and affected when applied to other modern writers, have a perfect propriety when applied to him. He was not an author, but a bard. His poetry seems not to have been an art, but an inspiration. Had he lived to the full age of man, he might not improbably have given to the world some great work of the very highest rank in design and execution. But, alas,

ὁ Δάφνις ἕβαρόν' ἔκλυσε δίνα
Τὸν Μώσαις φίλον ἄνδρα, τὸν οὐ Νυμφαισιν ἀπεχθῆ."

See, als., Edin. Rev, Feb. 1826, 332, (by Lord Macaulay.)

A portrait of Shelley, engraved by C. W. Sharpe, from the original painted by Miss Curran at Rome in 1818, now in possession of Sir Percy Florence Shelley, was struck off in 1860, and lithographic copies were published in 1867. We have now to add The Life of Percy Bysshe Shelley; to which is Prefixed a most Carefully Revised Edition of his Poetical Works, with some Early Verses hitherto unpublished, by William Michael Rossetti, Lon., 1869, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. A new edition of Medwin's Life of Shelley is promised.

Shelley, Lady, daughter of the late Thomas Gibson, Esq., was married first to the late Hon. Charles Robert St. John, brother to the present Lord Bolingbroke, and in 1848 to Sir Percy Florence Shelley. See Shelley, Percy Bysshe, No. 8.

Dr. Thehuper, who died in 1867, had in his library the following editions of Don Quixote: 400 in Spanish, 200 in English, 168 in French, 81 in Portuguese, 96 in Italian, 70 in German, 4 in Russian, 4 in Greek, 8 in Polish, 6 in Danish, 13 in Swedish and Latin.

Herr Hartzenbusch bestowed great pains upon a new edition of Don Quixote, collating early editions and a number of MSS. in the Escurial and National Library of Madrid; and among the Parisian gift-books of the winter of 1866–67, published by Hachette & Co., was a grand edition, in 2 volumes folio, of the famous romance, with nearly 400 illustration by Gustave Doré. Doré also designed the dresses and scenery for M. Sardon's drama founded on Don Quixote, announced for presentation at the Gymnase Theatre, Paris, in 1864.

Shenstone, William, 1714–1763, first saw the light on the patrimonial estate which his taste afterwards made so famous,—The Leasowes, Hales Owen, Shropshire. In 1732 he was entered of Pembroke College, Oxford, and

"here, it appears, he found delight and advantage; for he continued his name in the book ten years, though he took no degree. After the first four years he put on the civilian's gown, but without showing any intention to engage in the profession. . . . Mr. Dolman, to whose care he was indebted for his ease and leisure, died in 1745, and the care of his own fortune now fell upon himself. He tried to escape it awhile, and lived at his house with his tenants, who were distantly related; but, finding that imperfect possession inconvenient, he took the whole estate into his own hands, more to the improvement of its beauty than the increase of its produce. Now was excited his delight in rural pleasures, and his ambition of rural elegance: he began from this time to point his prospects, to diversify his surface, to entangle his walks, and to wind his waters; which he did with such judgment and such fancy as made his little domain the envy of the great and the admiration of the skilful,—a place to be visited by travellers and copied by designers."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Shenstone. See Cunningham's ed. of Johnson's Lives, 1854, iii. 295–304.

He subjected himself to some pecuniary inconvenience by his lavish expenditures on his favourite acres; but the investment seems not to have been a losing one to the estate:

"In the value of purchase, how much Mr. Shenstone's estate was improved by his taste, will be judged from the price it fetched when sold by auction in 1795, being £17,000 sterling; though when it descended to him it was only valued at 300*l.* a year."—Bishop Percy to Dr. Anderson.

But, alas! its glory has departed:

"The Leasowes now belongs to the Attwood family, and a Miss Attwood resides there occasionally; but the whole place bears the impress of desertion and neglect. The house has a dull look; the same heavy spirit broods over the lawns and glades; and it is only when you survey it from a distance, as when approaching Halesowen from Hagley, that the whole presents an aspect of unusual beauty."—Howitt's Homes and Haunts of the Most Eminent British Poets, 1847, vol. i.

If it were possible for the poet to return, that would be a melancholy ode which should record Leasowes Revisited!

1. Poems upon Various Occasions, written for the Entertainment of the Author, and printed for the Amusement of a few Friends, prejudiced in his Favour, Oxf., 1737, sm. 8vo, pp. 78. Privately printed, and the few copies struck off recalled. Some copies have the author's name on the title-page. Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 729, £15; Lilly's Sale Cat., July–Aug. 1857, £4 4*s.*

2. The Judgment of Hercules; a Poem, Lon., 1741, 8vo. Anon.

"I never inquire how my poem takes, and am afraid to do so. However, I find some do allow it to be Mallet's."

3. The School-Mistress; a Poem: in Imitation of Spenser, 1742, 8vo. The first sketch appeared in No. 1. The edition of 1742 contains 28 stanzas; the late editions have 35. Two of the first 28 were omitted.

"The 'Schoolmistress,' of which I know not what claim it has to stand among the Moral Works, is surely the most pleasing, of Shenstone's performances."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Shenstone.

The "moral" nomenclature was Dodsley's blunder: see, in Disraeli's Curiosities of Literature, Shenstone's "ludicrous index" added "purely to show (fools) that I am in jest." (Shenstone's Letters.)

"This poem is one of those happinesses in which a poet excels himself, as there is nothing in all Shenstone which any way approaches it in merit; and though I dislike the imitations of our old English poets in general, yet on this minute subject the antiquity of the style produces a very ludicrous solemnity."—GOLDSMITH: Works, by Cunningham, iii. 436.

"The Schoolmistress is excellent of its kind, and masterly."—GRAY: Letter to Walpole: Works, by Mitford, iii. 89.

"That water-gruel bard Shenstone, who never wrote any thing good but his 'Schoolmistress.'"—Horace Walpole to Rev. Wm. Mason, April 18, 1778: Letters, ed. 1861, vii. 54.

"Extremely pleasing; and he stands, perhaps, at the head of his competitors."—DR. AIKEN.

"The fond and naïve touches which give so much delightfulness to his portrait of the 'Schoolmistress.'"—CAMPBELL: Essay on Eng. Poet., ed. 1848, 279.

"Owes much of its attraction to its archaisms."—GEO. P. MARSH: Lects. on the Eng. Lang., 1860, 540.

"He wrote nothing else."—C. J. FOX: Recollec. by S. Rogers, 1859, 57.

After his death appeared (4) Works in Prose and Verse, most of which were never before Printed, 1764, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1765; 3d ed., with Familiar Letters, (also sep., 1769, 8vo;) 1768, 3 vols. 12mo; 4th ed., 1773, 3 vols. 8vo; 5th ed., 1777, 3 vols. sm. 8vo. An edit. was pub. at Edin., 1784, 2 vols. 18mo. Poetical Works, with Life, [by R. Dodsley,] Lon., 1804, 32mo; Essays on Men and Manners, with Life by Dr. Johnson, and Character by R. Dodsley, 32mo; and a new edit. of his Poetical Works and Ballads, with Life, Critical Dissertation, and Explanatory Notes, by Rev. George Gilfillan, Edin., 1854, 8vo. New edition of his Essays on Men and Manners, Lon., 1868, cr. 8vo. (Bradbury's Handy Volume Series.)

"The general recommendation of Shenstone is easiness and simplicity; his general defect is want of comprehension and variety. Had his mind been better stored with knowledge, whether he could have been great I know not; he could certainly have been agreeable."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Shenstone: (q. v. for notices of his Elegies, Lyric Poems, Pastoral Ballad, Levities, Choice of Hercules, Fate of Delicacy, and Love and Honour; and see Croker's Boswell's Johnson, Index.)

"His poems are indifferent and tasteless, except his Pastoral Ballad, his Lines on Jemmy Dawson, and his schoolmistress which last is a perfect piece of writing."—HAZLITT: Lects. on the Eng. Poets, Lect. VI.

"Poor Shenstone was labouring through his whole life to write a perfect song, and, in my opinion at least, never once succeeded; not better than Pope did in a St. Cecilian Ode."—Horace Walpole to J. Pinkerton, Oct. 6, 1784: Letters, ed. 1861, viii. 509.

"His genius is not forcible, but it settles in mediocrity without meanness."—CAMPBELL: Essay on Eng. Poetry.

"I have read an octavo volume of Shenstone's Letters. . . . His correspondence is about nothing else but this place [The Leasowes] and his own writings, with two or three neighbouring clergymen, who wrote verses too."—GRAY.

"I have got two more volumes of Shenstone's 'Correspondence,' and they are like all the rest, insipidity itself."—Horace Walpole to Rev. Wm. Mason, Jan. 24, 1778: Letters, ed. 1861, viii. 24. See, also, v. 169.

"His Letters show him to have lived in a continual fever of petty vanity, and to have been a finished literary coquet."—HAZLITT: Lects., &c., ut supra.

Sheridan, Frances, mother of R. B. Sheridan, born in Ireland, 1724, died at Blois, 1766, the daughter of Dr. Philip Chamberlaine, attracted the attention of her future husband, Thomas Sheridan, by a pamphlet in his favour published during a warm controversy relative to the theatre in Dublin, in which he was largely interested. Previously to this, at the early age of fifteen, she composed a romance, in two volumes, entitled Eugenia and Adelaide. Long afterwards it was adapted for the stage, as a comic drama, by Mrs. Sheridan's eldest daughter, Mrs. Lefanu, and was subsequently acted with success at Dublin. She afterwards gave to the world: 1. Memoirs of Miss Sidney Biddulph, extracted from her own Journal, and now first published, Lon., 1761, 3 vols. 12mo; in French, Mémoires d'une jeune Dame, by the Abbé Prevost. Vols. iii. and iv., in English, were pub. in 1767: new ed. of the whole, 1772, 5 vols. 12mo. This novel, of the Richardson school, was very successful both in English and French: part of it was dramatized.

"Greatly superior to most of the productions of her brother Novelists."—Lon. Month. Rev., April, 1761, 266.

"Some of us can remember the great popularity which it acquired, and the great avidity with which it was read."—Ibid., July, 1824, 257.

"A novel of great merit. . . . Johnson paid her this high compliment upon it: 'I know not, Madam, that you have a right, upon moral principles, to make your readers suffer so much.'"—BOSWELL: Croker's Boswell's Johnson, chaps. xiv., xv.

Lord North commended the work, and Charles James Fox

"thought Sidney Biddulph the best novel of our age. Sheridan ["in the heat of an argument"] denied having read it, though the plot of his School for Scandal was borrowed from it. The close of the second part very excellent."—Recollec. by S. Rogers, 1859, 30, 58.

2. The Discovery; a Comedy, 1763, 8vo. Successful. The principal part was performed by Garrick, who considered the play one of the best pieces he had ever read. See Blackw. Mag., xx. 26, 27. 3. The Dupe; a Comedy, 1764, 8vo. 4. The History of Nourjahad; a Romance, Lon., 1788, 8vo. Dramatized by Sophie Lee, one of the authoresses of the Canterbury Tales. Mrs. Sheridan intended it as the first of a series of moral fictions.

"Her last work is perhaps her best,—Nourjahad, an Eastern tale: in which a pure morality is inculcated with a great deal of fancy and considerable force."—J. W. CROKER: Boswell's Johnson, chap. xiv., n.

Mrs. Sheridan also wrote a play called The Trip to Bath. It was never acted nor published, but is supposed to have been laid under contribution by her son in The Rivals. In Dyce's Specimens of British Poetesses will be found some verses of this lady's, of which a late critic remarks,

"The verses of Mrs. Sheridan, mother of the famous Sheridan, and author of 'Sidney Biddulph,' are not so good as her novels."—LEIGH HUNT: Men, Women, and Books, vol. ii.

Sheridan, Miss Louisa Henrietta, was married to Lieut.-Col. Sir Henry Wyatt, Sept. 8, 1840, and d. at Paris, Oct. 2, 1841. Miss Sheridan was for some years the editor and chief author of The Comic Offering, or Ladies' Melange of Literary Mirth, which was commenced in 1831, and edited The Diadem, a Book for the Boudoir, Lon., 1838, 4to.

Sheridan, Rt. Hon. Richard Brinsley Butler, M.P., September, 1751–July 7, 1816, the son of Thomas Sheridan, the actor, elocutionist, and lexicographer, (infra,) and Frances Sheridan, the novelist and dramatist, (supra,) first opened his eyes on the light in Dorset Street, Dublin, and was baptized on the 4th of October at St. Mary's Church. At the age of seven he was, with his elder brother Charles, (supra,) placed under the care of Samuel Whyte, already chronicled by us (p. 1354, supra) as the "guide, philosopher, and friend" of Sheridan's biographer, Thomas Moore. Here his progress was not remarkable:

"It may be consoling," says Mr. Moore, "to parents who are in the first crisis of impatience at the sort of hopeless stupidity which some children exhibit, to know that the dawn of Sheridan's intellect was as dull and unpromising as its meridian day was bright; and that in the year 1759 he who in less than thirty years afterwards held senates enchained by his eloquence, and audiences fascinated by his wit, was, by common consent both of parents and preceptor, pronounced to be 'a most impenetrable dunce.'"—Memoirs of Sheridan.

But in 1762, when the supposed "impenetrable dunce" was sent to Harrow, the Head-Master, Dr. Summer, and one of the ushers, afterwards the famous Dr. Samuel Parr, "penetrated" that genius which they found themselves unable to develop.

He left Harrow when about eighteen, and at this time, although unable to spell English, displayed evidences of some progress in Greek: in conjunction with his friend H. Halhed, he had made translations of the seventh Idyl and many of the lesser poems of Theocritus; and to these they soon afterwards added English versions of the Love Epistles of Aristænetus. The latter have been recently published in the same volume (Bohn's Classical Library, No. LX., edited by Walter K. Kelly, 1854, p. 8vo) with the Elegies of Propertius, the Satyricon of Petronius Arbiter, and the Kisses of Johannes Secundus "a collection which should be placed next" to the plays of Congreve, Farquhar, Vanbrugh, and Wycherley on the first back-log which cheers the winter's hearth. The literary copartnership was carried on in 1770, when Halhed was at Oxford, attending to his studies, and Sheridan in London, neglecting his. The firm also produced a play, in three acts, called Jupiter, (an imitation of the burletta of Midas, one number (written by Sheridan) of a periodical miscellany, and projects (also Sheridan's) of a collection of Occasional Poems and a volume of Crazy Tales. None of these, however, were given to the world, save the Love Epistles before noticed, which were published in an octavo volume in August, 1771, (see Nichols's Lit. Anec., viii. 365,)—published, but not sold; and great was the disappointment of the youthful authors. An agreeable relief, however, was at hand; they both fell in love,—and both with the same lady; and Charles Sheridan, Richard's brother, with many others, bowed, at the same time, at the same shrine. The object of all this worship was Miss Linley, "The Maid of Bath," the far-famed leader of the "singing men and singing women" of that age.

"Her personal charms, the exquisiteness of her musical talents, and the full light of publicity which her profession threw upon both," remarks Mr. Moore, "naturally attracted round her a crowd of admirers, in whom the sympathy of common pursuit soon kindled into rivalry, till she became at length an object of vanity as well as of love. Her extreme youth, too, (for she was little more than sixteen when Sheridan first met her,) must have removed, even from minds the most fastidious and delicate, that repugnance they might have justly felt to her profession if she had lived much longer under its tarnishing influence, or lost, by frequent exhibitions before the public, that fine gloss of feminine modesty, for whose absence not all the talents and accomplishments of the whole sex can atone."

See, also, Original Letter from Miss Linley, in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1825, ii. 287–296, which contains a curious account of Mathews, with whom Sheridan fought two duels.

The fair cantatrice was already engaged to an elderly admirer, Mr. Long, of Wiltshire; but he proved more reasonable and generous than disappointed lovers are generally found: he not only released the damsel, but settled on her the sum of £3000, on the interest of which Mr. and Mrs. Sheridan (for she married our author in France in March, 1772, and the ceremony was repeated in England in April, 1773) principally subsisted for the first few years after their union. A few weeks previous to this event, Sheridan had been entered a student of the Middle Temple; and an income from a profession—for he would not permit his wife to exercise her profession—would have been a great addition to the happiness of the young people: a "law student," however, he cannot fairly be styled, and he was never called to the Bar. He now applied himself to dramatic composition, and in January, 1775, produced at Covent Garden his first comedy,—The Rivals,—which, after being damned the first night in consequence of the bad acting of Mr. Lee in Sir Lucius O'Trigger, took the town by storm. Sir Lucius, Sir Anthony Absolute, Captain Absolute, Falkland, Bob Acres, Fag, Lydia Languish, and Mrs. Malaprop, became domesticated in the household circle, quoted in the parks, parodied in the streets, plagiarized at the Clubs, and not unknown either to the Lords or the Commons. If the admirers of Humphrey Clinker imagined that they detected the rhetoric of Matthew Bramble in the declamation of Absolute, and the oratory of Mrs. Winifred Jenkins or of Mrs. Tabitha Bramble in the tropes of Mrs. Malaprop, the reunion was a source of pleasure rather than of complaint. In this year, also, he composed St. Patrick's Day; or, The Scheming Lieutenant. Thus encouraged, the fortunate author devoted the ensuing summer to the composition of The Duenna, the success of which was unequalled. The Beggar's Opera (see GAY, JOHN, p. 656, supra) had a run of sixty-three nights; The Duenna, first produced November 21, 1775, was played for seventy-five nights, without any intermission save a few days at Christmas and the Fridays in each week. About the close of this year Sheridan proposed to purchase Mr. Garrick's share in the patent of Drury Lane Theatre, (the contract was perfected in June, 1776,) of which he eventually became patentee and manager.

On the 24th of February, 1777, he brought out, at Drury Lane, A Trip to Scarborough, (altered from Vanbrugh's comedy of The Relapse,) and on the 8th of May ensuing carried his fame to its height by The School for Scandal,—"a sort of El Dorado of wit," says Moore, "where the precious metal is thrown about by all classes as carelessly as if they had not the least idea of its value."

"I have seen Sheridan's new comedy, ['The School for Scandal,'] and liked it much better than any I have seen since 'The Provoked Husband.' There is a great deal of wit and good situations; but it is too long, has two or three bad scenes that might easily be omitted, and seemed to me to want nature and truth of character; but I have not read it, and sat too high to hear it well."—Horace Walpole to Rev. Wm. Mason, May 15, 1776. Letters, ed. 1861, vii. 67.

"Apropos to the theatre, I have read the 'School for Scandal;' it is rapid and lively, but is far from containing the wit I expected from seeing it acted."—Horace Walpole to Rev. W. Mason, May, 1780: Letters, ed. 1861, vii. 360.

It has been newly translated into German, and is now (1869) having a great run in the German theatres.

As in The Rivals Smollett had been laid under contribution, in this last great triumph the graphic genius of Fielding had not been neglected,—and Tom Jones and Bliful greeted their old acquaintances in the characters of Charles and Joseph Surface. These, and the other prominent dramatis personæ, Sir Peter, Sir Oliver, Sir Benjamin, Snake, Crabtree, Mrs. Candour, and Lady Sneerwell, for a long time after the first consecutive representations of the play, for two or three nights in each week delighted or disgusted, according to their respective merits or demerits, the play-goers of the great metropolis, and in due season were introduced to the provincial towns. In 1779 he presented his audience with The Critic,—

"in some of its most admired passages little better than an exquisite cento of the wit of the satirists before him. Sheridan must have felt himself emphatically at home in a production of this kind, for there was every call in it upon the powers he abounded in,—wit, banter, and style,—and none upon his good nature."—LEIGH HUNT: Critical Sketch prefixed to Sheridan's Dramatic Works, 1841, r. 8vo.

The fact that Sir Fretful Plagiary was supposed to be the representation of Cumberland the dramatist, contributed not a little to the success of this witty performance.

"I have read Sheridan's 'Critic,' but, not having seen it, for they say it is admirably acted, it appeared wondrously flat and old, and a poor imitation: it makes me fear I shall not be so much charmed with 'The School for Scandal,' on reading, as I was when I saw it."—Horace Walpole to Rev. W. Mason, Dec. 11, 1779: Letters, ed. 1861, vii. 291.

We may here close Sheridan's dramatic record—two or three minor pieces are unnoticed—by a reference to his last essays in this line, The Stranger, and Pizarro, adaptations from the plays of Kotzebue.

Through the influence of Mr. Fox, Sheridan came into Parliament in 1780, as member for Stafford, and he zealously, and sometimes efficiently, supported the principles of the Whigs. Under the Rockingham administration, in March, 1782, he was Under-Secretary of State, but resigned on the death of the marquis in July of the same year. On the death of Pitt, in 1806, he became Treasurer of the Navy; but a change of affairs placed him on the opposite side of the House. He was defeated at the Westminster election in 1807, and lost his seat in Parliament in 1812. In 1792 death deprived him of his wife, whom Wilkes calls "the most modest, pleasing, and delicate flower he had seen." In 1795 he married Miss Ogle, daughter of the Dean of Westminster, "young, accomplished, and ardently devoted to him," and with the substantial recommendation of £5000. But this small sum, and many other sums, contributed by his friends and raised by various devices, afforded but temporary relief to one of his extravagant and careless habits: his latter years were embittered by a ceaseless contest with his many debtors, and he died, July 7, 1816, in the midst of mortifications and embarrassments which are graphically depicted in the pages of Mr. Moore. The reader of these, however, will do less than justice if he fail to compare with them the explanatory statements of Mr. J. W. Croker, in the London Quarterly Review for March, 1826, 561–93.

SHERIDAN THE DRAMATIC POET.

"Mr. Sheridan has been justly called 'a dramatic star of the first magnitude;' and, indeed, among the comic writers of the last century he 'shines like Hesperus among the lesser lights.' He has left four dramas behind him, all different or of different kinds, and all excellent in their way: 'The School for Scandal,' 'The Rivals,' 'The Duenna,' and 'The Critic.' . . . This is the merit of Sheridan's comedies, that every thing in them tells—there is no labour in vain. His comic muse does not go prying about into obscure corners, or collecting idle curiosities, but shows her laughing face, and points to her rich treasure,—the follies of mankind. She is garlanded and crowned with roses and vine-leaves. Her eyes sparkle with delight, and her heart runs over with good-natured malice. Her step is firm and light, and her ornaments consummate! 'The School for Scandal' is, if not the most original, perhaps the most finished and faultless, comedy which we have. When it is acted, you hear people all around you exclaiming, 'Surely it is impossible for any thing to be cleverer!' . . . 'The Rivals' is one of the most agreeable comedies we have. In the elegance and brilliancy of the dialogue, in a certain animation of moral sentiment, and in the masterly dénouement of the fable, 'The School for Scandal' is superior; but 'The Rivals' has more life and action in it, and abounds in a greater number of whimsical characters, unexpected incidents, and absurd contrasts of situation. . . . 'The Duenna' is a perfect work of art. It has the utmost sweetness and point. The plot, the characters, the dialogue, are all complete in themselves, and they are all his own; and the songs are the best that ever were written, except those in 'The Beggar's Opera.' They have a joyous spirit of intoxication in them, and a strain of the most melting tenderness."—HAZLITT: Lects. on the Eng. Comic Writers, Lect. VIII.

"The comedy of the fourth period is chiefly remarkable for exhibiting The Rivals and the School for Scandal. Critics prefer the latter; while the general audience reap, perhaps, more pleasure from the former; the pleasantry being of a more general cast, the incidents more complicated and varied, and the whole plot more interesting. In both these plays, the gentlemanlike ease of Farquhar is united with the wit of Congreve. Indeed, the wit of Sheridan, though equally brilliant with that of his celebrated predecessor, flows so easily, and is so happily elicited by the tone of the dialogue, that in admiring its sparkles we never once observe the stroke of the flint which produces them. Wit and pleasantry seemed to be the natural atmosphere of this extraordinary man, whose history was at once so brilliant and so melancholy."—SIR WALTER SCOTT: Essay on the Drama, in Encyc. Brit.; and in his Miscell. Prose Works.

"At the same age with Congreve he composed comedies of similar, and one of almost equal, merit: like his great master, he neglected incident and character, and sought only brilliancy of dialogue: what he sought he attained, even to excess; and his wit was fertile enough to betray him into the splendid fault of rendering his dialogue more dazzling and poignant than suited his own personages, or indeed any human conversation."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Life, ii. chap. iii.

"There is too much merely ornamental dialogue, and, with some very fine rhetorical situations, too much intermission in the action and business of the play; and, above all, there is too little real warmth of feeling, and too few indications of noble or serious passion, thoroughly to satisfy the wants of English readers and spectators—even in a comedy. Their wit [that of The Rivals and The School for Scandal] is the best of them."—LORD JEFFREY: Edin. Rev., Dec. 1826, 7.

"The dramas of Sheridan . . . have placed him at the head of the genteel comedy of England; and while truth of character and manners, chastised brilliancy of wit, humour devoid of the least stain of coarseness, exquisite knowledge of stage-effect, and consummate ease and elegance of idiomatic language are appreciated, there can be no doubt that the name of Sheridan will maintain its place."—J. WILSON CROKER: Lon. Quar. Rev., March, 1826, 592.

"The Duenna is formed after the fashion of Gay; of whom it falls farther short than 'The School for Scandal' does of Congreve. That his plays were great productions for any age, astonishing for a youth of twenty-three and twenty-five, is unquestionable."—LORD BROUGHAM: States. Time Geo. III., ed. 1855, i. 292; and in Contrib. to Edin. Rev, 1856, i. 305.

"No writers have injured the Comedy of England so deeply as Congreve and Sheridan. Both were men of splendid wit and polished taste. Unhappily, they made all their characters in their own likeness. Their works bear the same relation to the legitimate drama which a transparency bears to a painting. There are no delicate touches, no hues imperceptibly fading into each other: the whole is lighted up with an universal glare. Outlines and tints are forgotten in the common blaze which illuminates all. The flowers and fruits of the intellect abound; but it is the abundance of a jungle, not of a garden,—unwholesome, bewildering, unprofitable from its very plenty, rank from its very fragrance. Every fop, every boor, every valet, is a man of wit. The very butts and dupes, Tattle, Witwould, Puff, Acres, outshine the whole Hotel of Rambouillet."—LORD MACAULAY: Machiavelli: Edin. Rev., March, 1827; and in his Collected Essays, ed. 1854, i. 84.

SHERIDAN THE ORATOR.

"His reputation as an orator may be said to rest substantially on his two speeches against Mr. Warren Hastings; and it unfortunately happens, as we have already hinted, that both of these are miserably reported in the parliamentary debates. When he delivered those far-famed philippics, he was a new man in St. Stephen's,—the extent of his genius and the truth of his character were yet to be developed; and we must be permitted to doubt whether, if he had spoken the same words a few years later, the world would have heard so much about the matter. Whenever Sheridan attempts any serious passion in his dramas, he fails deplorably: and his life was a jest:—is it possible that he could ever command, or at least sustain, that genial enthusiasm without which declamation may flourish, but oratory cannot be?"—J. WILSON CROKER: Lon. Quar. Rev., March, 1826, 593.

"Sheridan's speech on the Begums in the House of Commons admirable; in Westminster Hall, contemptible. I heard both."—LORD GRENVILLE: Recollec. by S. Rogers, 1859, 181.

The Second Begum Speech was made in Westminster Hall, June 3 et seq., 1788; the First Begum Speech (for a written copy of which Sheridan refused the offer of £1000) was delivered in the House of Commons, Feb. 7, 1787; and on the latter we quote some opinions:

"Mr. Burke declared it to be 'the most astonishing effort of eloquence, argument, and wit united, of which there was any record or tradition.' Mr. Fox said, 'All that he had ever heard, all that he had ever read, when compared with it, dwindled into nothing, and vanished like vapour before the sun;' and Mr. Pitt acknowledged 'that it surpassed all the eloquence of ancient or modern times, and possessed every thing that genius or art could furnish, to agitate and controul the human mind.'"—MOORE: Memoirs of Sheridan.

"A speech which was so imperfectly reported that it may be said to be wholly lost, but which was, without doubt, the most elaborately brilliant of all the productions of his ingenious mind. The impression which it produced was such as has never been equalled. He sat down, not merely amidst cheering, but amidst the loud clapping of hands, in which the lords below the bar and the strangers in the gallery joined. The excitement of the House was such that no other speaker could obtain a hearing; and the debate was adjourned. The ferment spread fast through the town. Within four-and-twenty hours, Sheridan was offered a thousand pounds for the copyright of the speech, if he would himself correct it for the press. The impression made by this remarkable display of eloquence on severe and experienced critics, whose discernment may be supposed to have been quickened by emulation, was deep and permanent. Mr. Windham, twenty years later, said that the speech deserved all its fame, and was, in spite of some faults of taste, such as were seldom wanting either in the literary or in the parliamentary performances of Sheridan, the finest that had been delivered within the memory of man. Mr. Fox about the same time, being asked by the late Lord Holland what was the best speech ever made in the House of Commons, assigned the first place, without hesitation, to the great Oration of Sheridan on the Oude Charge."—LORD MACAULAY: Warren Hastings: Edin. Rev., Oct. 1841; and in his Collected Essays.

"His most celebrated speech was certainly the one upon the 'Begum Charge,' in the proceedings against Hastings; and nothing can exceed the accounts left us of its unprecedented success. . . . All men on all sides vied with each other in extolling so wonderful a performance. Nevertheless, the opinion has now become greatly prevalent that a portion of this success was owing to the speech having so greatly surpassed all the speaker's former efforts; to the extreme interest of the topics which the subject naturally presented; and to the artist-like elaboration and beautiful delivery of certain fine passages, rather than to the merits of the whole. Certain it is that the repetition of great part of it, presented in the short-hand notes of the speech on the same charge in Westminster, disappoints every reader who has heard of the success of the earlier effort. In truth, Mr. Sheridan's taste was very far from being chaste, or even moderately correct; he delighted in gaudy figures; he was attracted by glare, and cared not whether the brilliancy came from tinsel or gold, from broken glass or pure diamond; he overlaid his thoughts with epigrammatic diction; he 'played to the galleries,' and indulged them, of course, with an endless succession of clap-traps. His worst passages by far were those which he evidently preferred himself."—LORD BROUGHAM: States. Times Geo. III., 294.

"The most deliberate criticism must allow his eloquence to be distinguished by strong sense and brilliant wit; by a vigour of argument not too ingenious for business, nor too subtle for conviction; by a great command of pure English words, and by a vivid power of imagination in those passages which aimed at grandeur and pathos; though they must be owned to be too artificial and ostentatious to produce the highest effect and to be approved by a severe taste."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Life, ii. chap. iii.

"There was, undoubtedly, some bombast in Mr. Sheridan's speeches; but they were marked by glowing eloquence, and not unfrequently by brilliant wit. Although some of his jokes were the result of great study, yet, as they were perfect in their kind, and that kind of the very highest, we may forgive the labour. Few men have possessed the power to make such a speech as that which dazzled the House of Commons on the Begum Charge; few ever wrote so good a comedy as 'The School for Scandal.' It is melancholy to reflect that the possessor of such talents should, as it were in mere wantonness, have thrown away the influence which he was so well qualified to exercise over the destiny of his country."—LORD JOHN RUSSELL: Memoirs, &c. of Thomas Moore, ii., 1853, 187, n. "Lord Holland told me a curious piece of sentimentality in Sheridan. The other night we were all delivering our respective and various opinions on him and other hommes marquans, and mine was this: 'Whatever Sheridan has done or chosen to do has been, par excellence, always the best of its kind! He has written the best comedy, (School for Scandal,) the best drama, (in my mind, far before that St. Giles's lampoon, The Beggar's Opera,) the best farce, (The Critic—it is only too good for a farce,) and the best Address, (Monologue on Garrick,) and, to crown all, delivered the very best Oration (the famous Begum Speech) ever conceived or heard in this country.' Somebody told S. this the next day, and on hearing it he burst into tears! Poor Brinsley! if they were tears of pleasure, I would rather have said these few but most sincere words than have written the Iliad or made his own celebrated philippic. Nay, his own comedy never gratified me more than to hear that he had derived a moment's gratification from any praise of mine, humble as it must appear to 'my elders and betters.'"—Lord Byron's Journal, Dec. 17, 18, 1813: Moore's Byron, ii.

Sheridan left one son, Thomas, by his first wife, and one son, Charles, by his second wife. Charles, who was something of a poet, (ut supra,) died recently, unmarried. Thomas, whose wife was an authoress, (ut infra,) died Sept. 12, 1817, at the Cape of Good Hope, where he was Colonial Paymaster, (see Lon. Gent. Mag., Nov. 1817, 471.) He left four sons,—viz.: I. Richard Brinsley, M.P. for Dorchester; II. Thomas Berkeley, R.N., d. 1826; III. Francis Cymric, d. 1842; IV. Charles Kennaird, in the diplomatic service,—and three daughters, viz.: I. Helen Selina, married in 1825 to Lord Dufferin and Claneboye, and mother of the present Lord Dufferin, (p. 527, supra;) II. Caroline Elizabeth Sarah, married in 1827 to the Hon. George Chapple Norton, (p. 1438, supra;) III. Jane Georgiana, married in 1830 to Lord Seymour, since Duke of Somerset.

Sheridan, Thomas, the grandfather of R. B. Sheridan, 1684–1738, a native of the county of Cavan, Ireland, was educated at Trinity College, Dublin; afterwards received holy orders, and established a school in Dublin; received, through the influence of his friend Swift, a living in the south of Ireland, which he exchanged for one in Dunboyne; lost his chaplaincy to the Lord Lieutenant by choosing for his text on the anniversary of the King's birthday, "Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof;" subsequently took the Free School at Cavan, sold it for £400, and died in sickness and distress. Lord Cork characterizes him as "ill-starred, good-natured, and improvident, . . . a punster, a quibbler, a fiddler, and a wit. Not a day passed without a rebus, an anagram, or a madrigal. His pen and his fiddle-stick were in continual motion, and yet to little or no purpose."

Sheridan, Thomas, son of the preceding, godson of Jonathan Swift, father of R. B. Sheridan, and husband of Frances Sheridan, 1721–1788, a native of Quilca, Ireland, was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Dublin, and made his first appearance on the stage of the theatre in Smock Alley, Dublin, January, 1743, in the character of Richard III. In 1744 he played at Covent Garden, and in 1745 with Garrick at Drury Lane, and subsequently became—not successfully—a theatrical manager. The great passion of his life from youth up was oratory and the exposition of its supposed advantages to public audiences. His last appearance on the stage occurred in 1776. On the retirement of Garrick, the purchasers of the share in Drury Lane (of whom his son R. B. Sheridan was one) made him manager of the theatre, and this post he retained for three years, after which he returned to his Lectures and his books. On the accession of George III. he was honoured with a pension, which disgusted his fellow-pensioner Dr. Johnson, and elicited an exclamation which Sheridan resented.

Sherlock, Martin, an Irish divine, Chaplain to the Earl of Bristol. 1. Consiglio ad un giovane Poeta, &c., (Counsel to a Young Poet,) Naples, 1779, 8vo. In Italian. See Lon. Month. Rev., Dec. 1779, 460; Feb. 1787, 173. A portion of the Consiglio was trans. from the Italian into French by a Frenchman, and this was translated into English, under the title of A Fragment of Shakespeare, &c., Lon., 1786, 8vo.

"I should think everybody in this age could write best in his own [language]. . . . Mr. Sherlock's Italian is ten times worse than his French, and more bald. He by no means wants parts, but a good deal more judgment."—Horace Walpole to the Countess of Ossory, Nov. 16, 1780: Letters, ed. 1861, vii. 462. See, also, viii. 158, 202, 209.

2. Lettres d'un Voyageur Anglois, Geneva, 1779; Neufchâtel, 1781, 8vo; in English, (not by the author,) Lon., 1780, 4to. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1779, 601. Compare Croker's Boswell's Johnson, ed. 1848, r. 8vo, 770, with Lon. Month. Rev., Dec. 1779, 462; July, 1780, 45; Jan. 1781, 106. Croker seems to be at fault, and to do injustice to Sherlock. 3. York, 16mo. Greatly esteemed.

"Primitive method of devotion."—Bishop Wilson.

6. Irregularity of Private Prayer in a Public Congregation, Lon., 1674, 8vo; with other Discourses on same, Oxon., 1684, 8vo. Notices of Sherlock will be found in Wood's Athen. Oxon.; Wood's Life; Harris's Ware.

Sherlock, Thomas, D.D., son of Dean Thomas Sherlock, (infra,) was born in London, 1678, and educated at Eton and at Catherine Hall, Cambridge, of which he became Fellow; Master of the Temple, 1704; Preb. of London, 1713; Master of Catherine Hall, 1714; Dean of Chichester, Nov. 1715; Preb. of Norwich, 1719; Bishop of Bangor, Feb. 4, 1727–8; trans. to Salisbury, 1734, and to London, 1748; declined the Archbishopric of Canterbury, 1747; died 1761. He pub. a collective edition of his Discourses at the Temple Church in 1754–58, 4 vols. 8vo; 3d ed., 1755, 4 vols. 8vo, some on thick writing-paper; 4th ed., 1756, 4 vols. 8vo; 5th ed., 1759, 4 vols. 8vo; 1764, 4 vols. 8vo; 1770, 4 vols. 12mo; 6th ed., 1772, 4 vols. 8vo; 7th ed., 1774, 5 vols. 8vo; 8th ed., 1775, 3 vols. 12mo: vol. v., 1776, again, 1797; new ed., 1785, 4 vols. 8vo; again, Oxf., 1797, 5 vols. 8vo; new ed., with addition of the Discourses on Prophecy, Four Dissertations, Charge to the Clergy, Letter on the Earthquakes, and Trial of the Witnesses, all in 4 vols. 8vo, Oxf., C. P., 1812. Sherlock's Discourses, with Biographical Sketch of the Author by Rev. D. S. Wayland, Lon., 1824, (some 1825,) 8vo. The first complete edition of Sherlock's Works was pub., with some Account of his Life, Summary of each Discourse, Notes, &c., by Rev. T. S. Hughes, (see Hughes, Thomas Smart, D.D., No. 3,) Lon., 1830, 5 vols. 8vo, £1 17*s*. 6*d*. The Summaries were also pub. separately, in 1 vol. 8vo, 1830. Two or three of the Bishop's treatises (to those which form part of the Bangorian controversy a guide is afforded on p. 852) must be specially noticed. 1. The Use and Intent of Prophecy in the Several Ages of the World, to which are added Four Dissertations, 1725, 8vo, (1st Dissert. is not in this, the 1st, ed.;) 4th ed., 1744, 8vo; again, 1755, 8vo; last ed., (Eng. Ch. Lib., vol. xi.,) with Pref. by Rev. H. Melvill, 1840, fp. 8vo. See COLLINS, ANTHONY, p. 412, supra; TOWNE, JOHN, No. 2. This work should be read with the first three of Bishop Hurd's Warburton Lectures: together they "give a complete illustration of the general idea of prophecy, and lay down such principles for the investigation of the subject as may with ease be applied in refutation of the most specious objections of infidel writers."—BISHOP VAN MILDERT.

"The Use and Extent of Prophecy . . . is an excellent performance."—DR. LELAND: Deist. Writers, ed. 1837, 79, (q. v.)

"Has many good hints."—Bickersteth's C. S., ed. 1844, 473. See, also, Farrar's Crit. Hist. of Free Thought, 1863, 8vo, Lect. V., n. 26.

Conyers Middleton's attack on this work, which was attributed to Sherlock's opposition to his application for the mastership of the Charter-House, (see Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors, in Miscell. of Lit., ed. 1853, 313,) has been noticed on p. 1275, supra.

"I think it the weakest as well as warmest pamphlet the Dr. [Middleton] ever wrote. But I agree with you, there is no harm done. It may be of use to make people understand themselves."—Warburton to Hurd, 11th July, 1750.

2. Tryal of the Witnesses of the Resurrection of Jesus, 1729, 8vo; 3d ed., 1729, 8vo. Anon. 12th ed., 1748, 8vo; again, 1755; 1786; 16th ed., 1807, 8vo. More than 20 edits. have been pub. Dr. Charles Moss's Evidence of the Resurrection Cleared, &c., 1744, 8vo, was repub. as The Sequel to the Tryal, &c., revised by the Author of the Tryal, &c., 1749, '57, 8vo. The last edits. of The Tryal and The Sequel were recently pub. in 1 vol. r. 8vo, by Mr. H. G. Bohn. They are also included in Bohn's vol. of Christian Evidences: see JENYNS, SOAME, M.P., No. 7; WEST, GILBERT, LL.D., No. 3. The Trial was elicited by Woolston's Discourses on the Miracles.

"The Trial of the Witnesses has been very justly admired for the polite and uncommon turn, as well as the judicious way of treating the subject."—Leland's Deist. Writers, 89, (q. v.)

And see, also, the list of pamphlets on the Resurrection of Christ, in Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 986, No. 62; and ANNET, PETER, p. 63, supra. The Trial should be in every theological library.

"An able work on this evidence of Scripture."—Bickersteth's C. S., 473.

"There is an air of lightness about it, which is perhaps unfavourable to the solemn importance of the subject; but this very lightness, and the mode in which the argument is carried on, produce an interest and an effect which do not always result from more laboured efforts."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 402.

3. Letters, &c. on the Late Earthquakes, 1750, 4to; Supp., 1750, 4to. More than 100,000 copies of this Letter were sold within a month. It elicited Modest Remarks, &c., by a Quaker, 1750, 8vo. For an account of the earthquakes, see Smollett's History of England, year 1750. Notices of Sherlock will be found in Biog. Brit.; Bp. C. Moss's Charge, 1764; Dr. Nicholl's Serm. on Sherlock's death; Nichols's Lit. Anec. See, also, Lon. Quar. Rev., ii. 309; NORRIS, CHARLES. But of all that has been said in praise of Sherlock's Sermons, we shall hardly be excused if we quote nothing.

"They contain admirable defences of the truths of religion, and powerful incitements to the practice of it. They rouse the virtues of Christians by proper motives, and put to silence the doubts and cavils of Infidels by most convincing arguments."—DR. HUGH BLAIR.

"The Sermons of Sherlock, though censured by Mr. Church, are master-pieces of argument and eloquence. His Discourses on Prophecy and the Trial of the Witnesses are perhaps the best defences of Christianity in our language."—DR. JOSEPH WARTON: ed. of Pope's Works.

"Still break the benches, Henley! with thy strain, While Sherlock, Hare, and Gibson preach in vain."
POPE: Dunciad, book iii. 203.

"Bishop Sherlock's discourses are incomparable."—BISHOP VAN MILDERT.

"They contain strong arguments, awful representations, exceeding proper for conviction: his style is plain and manly."—DR. DODDRIDGE.

"Sherlock's style is very elegant, though he has not made it his principal study."—DR. JOHNSON: Boswell's Life, year 1778.

"Those admirable Sermons, which stand foremost among the brightest ornaments of our theological literature."—DR. T. S. HUGHES: Biog. Pref. to Sherlock's Works.

"Without departing for a moment from the sobriety of an accomplished prose writer, he often produces the effect of the sublimest poetry."—DR. D. S. WAYLAND: Pref. to Sherlock's Discourses.

Dr. Wayland considers him superior to Clark, Tillotson, and Atterbury.

"Sherlock is an oasis in Church literature."—REV. SYDNEY SMITH.

"The calm and dispassionate disquisition on some text of Scripture, or the discussion of some theological question, henceforward to be the exclusive object of an English sermon, was carried by Sherlock to a perfection rarely rivalled, unless by Smalridge, nearly his own contemporary, and by Horsley in more recent times."—Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1823, 302.

See, also, the Works of Jonathan Edwards, D.D., ed. N. York, 1844, ii. 625.

Sherlock, William, D.D., father of the preceding, was born in Southwark, London, 1641; educated at Eton, and thence removed to Peter-house, Cambridge, 1657; Rector of St. George's, Botolph Lane, London, 1669; Preb. of St. Paul's, 1681; Master of the Temple, 1684; Rector of Therfield, Hertfordshire; at the Revolution refused to take the oaths, and was suspended, but subsequently complied; Dean of St. Paul's, 1691; died 1707. More than sixty publications, chiefly books and pamphlets against Romanism, theological and political tracts, and single sermons from his pen, issued 1674–1706, are enumerated in Watt's Bibl. Brit. Of these we notice: 1. Discourse concerning the Knowledge of Jesus Christ and our Union with Him, Lon., 1674, 8vo. An attack on Dr. John Owen's work on Communion. See ALSOP, VINCENT; POLHILL, EDWARD, No. 2; ROWLES, SAMUEL; Toplady's Works, (Hervey on Anti-Sozzo.) South declared that Alsop gained a complete victory. Thomas Dawson was one of Sherlock's opponents. 2. Defence and Continuation of No. 1, 1675, 8vo. 3. The Case of Resistance to the Supreme Powers Stated and Resolved, according to the Doctrines of the Holy Scriptures, 1684, 8vo.

"The most able treatise on that side."—HALLAM: Constit. Hist. of Eng., 7th ed., 1854, i. 460, n. See, also, iii. 107, n.

4. Practical Discourse concerning Death; on Heb. xi. 27, Lon., 1689, '90, 8vo; 1713; 16th ed., 1715; 19th ed., 1723, 8vo; 1767; 1810, 8vo; Albany, 1814, 12mo; Lon., 1824, 8vo; in Welsh, by Thomas Williams, Oxon., 1691, 8vo; in French, nouvelle éd., Amst., 1712, 8vo.

"He who has not perused this excellent piece has not, perhaps, read one of the strongest Persuasives to a Religious Life that ever was written in any language."—ADDISON.

5. A Vindication of the Doctrine of the Trinity, and of the Incarnation of the Son of God, Lon., 1690, '91, '94, 4to.

"With objectionable sentiments: it was animadverted on with bitterness by Dr. South, [Animadversions upon Dr. Sherlock's Book, &c., 1694, 4to.] This led to a defence, and rejoinder, and a censure of Dr. Sherlock's views by the University of Oxford. Mr. Howe wrote a calm inquiry in opposition to Dr. Sherlock's view."—BICKERSTETH.

See, also, Burnet's Own Times, ed. 1833, iv. 390; Lowndes's Brit. Lib., 1114, (List of Pamphlets.) The controversy waxed warm, and was at last closed by the interference of the king.

6. The Case of Allegiance due to Sovereign Powers Stated, 1691, 4to.

"Sherlock took the oaths, and speedily published, in justification of his conduct, a pamphlet entitled The Case of Allegiance to Sovereign Powers Stated. The sensation produced by this work was immense. Dryden's Hind and Panther had not raised so great an uproar. Halifax's Letter to a Dissenter had not called forth so many answers. The replies to the Doctor, the vindications of the Doctor, the pasquinades on the Doctor, would fill a library."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of Eng., iv. chap. xvii. See notices of Sherlock in ii. chaps. vi., x.; iii. chaps. xi., xiv., xv.

7. Practical Discourse concerning a Future Judgment; on Acts xvii. 31, 1692, 8vo; 5th ed., 1699, 3vo; 1710, '13, '15, '39, 8vo; N. York; in French, nouvelle éd., Amst., 1712, 8vo. 8. Discourse concerning the Divine Providence, Lon., 1694, 8vo; 1715, 8vo; 1725, 8vo; 1737, 8vo; also in 4to and 12mo; Pittsburg; in French; in German, with Preface by Mosheim. 9. Practical Discourse of Religious Assemblies, 3d ed., Lon., 1700, 8vo; new ed., by Rev. Henry Melvill, 1840, fp. 8vo, (Eng. Lib., xi.) 10. The Unity of Religious Assemblies: in Tracts of Angl. Fathers, iii. 288. 11. Practical Discourse concerning the Happiness of the Good and the Punishment of the Wicked in the Next World, Lon., Pt. 1, 1704, 8vo. Repub. as A Discourse of the Immortality of the Soul and Future State, 1705, 8vo; 4th ed., 1726, 8vo; 5th ed., 1735, 8vo; Glasg., 1764, 2 vols. in 1, 12mo; Essay on Future Punishment, Lon., 1865, p. 8vo.

"Dean Sherlock, who has brought forward, with irrefragable force, the natural arguments for the immortality of the soul and a future state."—Southey's Colloquies. See, also, Nouv. de la Répub. des Lettres, xxiv. 363, 520, 660, xxv. 35.

12. Scripture Proofs of our Saviour's Divinity, 1706, 8vo. 13. Salvation by Christ, Cin., 1855, 24mo. 14. Discourse on the Lord's Supper, Lon., 1720; new ed., 1859, 12mo. A collection of his Sermons preached upon Several Occasions, edited by Mr. White, was pub. 1700, 8vo; 3d ed., 1719, 8vo; vol. ii., 1719, 8vo, (see titles in Darling's Cyc. Bibl., i. 2729;) new ed. of both, 1755, 2 vols. 8vo.

"A divine of distinguished abilities. . . . In little more than two years [1685–88] he published sixteen treatises, some of them large books, against the high pretensions of Rome."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of Eng., ii. chap. vi., and iii. chap. xiv.

Of these, eight will be found in Gibson's Preservative, (see GIBSON, EDMUND, D.D., No. 18,) vols. iii. 128, 181, iv. 309, v. 299, vi. 90, xi. 104, 247, xiv. 94. His Resolution of some Cases with Respect to Church Communion, (1694,) and Letter to Anonymous, (1683, 4to,) were repub. in Collection of Cases, (1718, 3 vols. 8vo,) vol. i. 43. For other notices of Sherlock, see Biog. Brit.; Burnet's Own Times; Birch's Tillotson; Nichols's Corresp. of Atterbury. See, also, TAYLOR, NATHANIEL, No. 6.

"He was a clear, a polite, and a strong writer; . . . but he was apt to assume too much to himself, and to treat his adversaries with contempt: this created him many enemies, and made him pass for an insolent, haughty man."—BISHOP BURNET: Own Times, ed. 1833, iv. 388.

"On moral subjects his arguments are generally strong, exceeding proper for conviction. He is plain and manly, great and animated. His representations are exceeding awful; therefore his 'Death' and 'Judgment' are his best books. His book on 'Providence' is by many thought to be the best on that subject."—DR. DODDRIDGE.

Mr. Bickersteth remarks that "Sherlock's practical works are better than his controversial," (C. S., ed. 1844, 455,) and characterizes his treatises on Death, Judgment, and Providence as "practical, though deficient in gospel principles," (Ibid., 502.)

Shirley, James, 1596–1666, a native of London, educated at Merchant Taylors' School, St. John's College, Oxford, and Catherine Hall, Cambridge; took holy orders, and obtained a curacy near St. Alban's, which he resigned in consequence of his conversion to the Roman Catholic Church. He now established a Grammar-School at St. Alban's, which proved unsuccessful, and he removed to London and commenced writing poems and plays. The first of his poems—Eccho; or, The Infortunate Lovers—was pub. 1618, 8vo. After producing a number of dramas, his labours were interrupted in 1640 by the Civil War, and he accepted service on the Royalist side, under the Duke of Newcastle. Returning to peaceful pursuits, the ordinance of the Long Parliament and enactments of a similar character, prohibiting the exhibition of "public stage plays," threw him again upon school-teaching as a means of subsistence; and his academy in White Friars turned out many pupils who "afterwards proved most eminent in divers faculties." In 1646 he again resumed the publication of plays and poems. In 1666 he was driven, with his second wife, by the great fire, from their house in Fleet Street into the parish of St. Giles,

"where, being in a manner overcome with affrightments, disconsolations, and other miseries occasion'd by that fire and their losses, they both died within the compass of a natural day."—WOOD: Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., iii. 740.

To Wood's valuable article on Shirley (which includes notices of George Chapman and John Ogilby) we refer the reader for an account of Shirley's plays, (in some of which he was assisted by George Chapman and others,) poems, and grammatical treatises. Since the publication of that work, the edition of Shirley's Works, referred to by Dr. Bliss on col. 744 as in preparation, has appeared, under the following title:

The Dramatic Works and Poems of James Shirley, now first collected; with Notes by the late William Gifford, Esq.; and additional Notes and some Account of Shirley and his Writings, by the Rev. Alexander Dyce, Lon., 1833, 6 vols. 8vo, £3 3s.; l. p., r. 8vo, £4 10s.: Fowle, Dec. 1864, 666, $90. Contents: Vol. I. Account of Shirley and his Writings, by Dyce; Commendatory Verses; Love-Tricks, or the School of Complement; Maid's Revenge; Brothers; The Witty Fair One; The Wedding. II. The Grateful Servant; The Traitor; Love's Cruelty; Love in a Maze; The Bird in a Cage:

Hyde Park. III. The Ball; Young Admiral; Gamester; The Example; The Opportunity; Coronation. IV. The Lady of Pleasure; The Royal Master; The Duke's Mistress; The Doubtful Heir; St. Patrick for Ireland; The Constant Maid; Humorous Courtier. V. A collective edition of his Poems, concluding with The Triumph of Beavtie, was pub., Lon., 1646, 8vo, (see Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 642, 643, 644;) and he pub. Six New Playes, viz.: The Brothers, Sisters, Doubtful Heir, Imposture, Cardinall, and Court Secret, in one vol., in 1653, sm. 8vo.

His grammatical treatises were pub. as follows: 1. Via ad Latinam Linguam complanata: The Way made Plain to the Latine Tongue, &c., 1649, 8vo. 2. Grammatica Anglo-Latina; an English and Latin Grammar, &c., 1651, 8vo. 3. The Rudiments of Grammar: The Rules composed in English Verse, &c., 1656, 12mo; 2d ed.,—Manuductio, &c.,—1660, 12mo. 4. Introduction to English, Latin, and Greek, 1656, 8vo. 5. An Essay towards an Universal and Rational Grammar, together with Rules for Learning Latin in English Verse, by Mr Shirley: to which is annex'd the Latin Particles, &c., (by Jenkin Tho. Philipps,) 1726, 8vo. He also assisted his patron, the Earl (afterwards the Duke) of Newcastle, (see CAVENDISH, WILLIAM,) in the composition of several plays published by his lordship, and wrote notes for John Ogilby's translations of Homer and Virgil. Of the nearly two-score plays to which the name of Shirley is attached, perhaps not half a dozen were familiar to the general reader before the appearance of Mr. Dyce's edition of his Works; nor has that publication much extended his circle of readers. Yet Wood (ubi supra) calls him "the most noted dramatic poet of his time," and Langbaine, twenty-five years after Shirley's death, prefixed the following, with other lines, to his catalogue of his plays:

"One of such Incomparable parts that he was the Chief of the Second-rate Poets; and by some has been thought even equal to Fletcher himself. . . . I need not take pains to shew his Intimacy not only with the Poets of his Time, but even the Value and Admiration that Persons of the first Rank had for him, since the Verses before several of his Works and his Epistles Dedicatory sufficiently shew it."—Dramatic Poets, 1691, 474, 475.

Charles Lamb concludes his Characters of Dramatic Writers contemporary with Shakspeare with the remark,

"James Shirley claims a place amongst the worthies of this period, not so much for any transcendent talent in himself, as that he was the last of a great race, all of whom spoke nearly the same language and had a set of moral feelings and notions in common. A new language, and quite a new turn of tragic and comic interest, came in with the Restoration."—Works of Charles Lamb, ed. Boston, 1860, iv. 127.

Mr. Campbell speaks in a more decisive tone:

"Shirley was the last of our good old dramatists. When his works shall be given to the public, they will undoubtedly enrich our popular literature. His language sparkles with the most exquisite images. Keeping some occasional pruriences apart, the fault of his age rather than of himself, he speaks the most polished and refined dialect of the stage; and even some of his over-heightened scenes of voluptuousness are meant, though with a very mistaken judgment, to inculcate morality. I consider his genius, indeed, as rather brilliant and elegant than strong or lofty. His tragedies are defective in fire, grandeur, and passion; and we must select his comedies, to have any favourable idea of his humour. His finest poetry comes forth in situations rather more familiar than tragedy and more grave than comedy, which I should call sentimental comedy, if the name were not associated with ideas of modern insipidity. That he was capable, however, of pure and excellent comedy will be felt by those who have yet in reserve the amusement of reading his Gamester, Hyde-park, and Lady of Pleasure. In the first and last of these there is a subtle ingenuity in producing comic effect and surprise, which might be termed Attic, if it did not surpass any thing that is left us in Athenian comedy. I shall leave to others the more special enumeration of his faults."—Specimens of English Poets, Lon., 1819, (q. v.)

"Shirley has no originality, no force in conceiving or delineating character, little of pathos, and less perhaps of wit; his dramas produce no deep impression in reading, and of course can leave none in the memory. But his mind was poetical; his better characters, especially females, express pure thoughts in pure language; he is never tumid or affected, and seldom obscure; the incidents succeed rapidly, the personages are numerous, and there is a general animation in the scenes which causes us to read him with some pleasure. No very good play, nor, possibly, any very good scene, could be found in Shirley; but he has many lines of considerable beauty. Among his comedies, the Gamesters may be reckoned the best. . . . The Ball, and also some more among the comedies of Shirley, are so far remarkable and worthy of being read, that they bear witness to a more polished elegance of manners, and a more free intercourse in the higher class, than we find in the comedies of the preceding reign. A queen from France, and that queen Henrietta Maria, was better fitted to give this tone than Anne of Denmark. But it is not from Shirley's pictures that we can draw the most favourable notions of the morals of that age."—HALLAM: Lit Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 120. See, also, 524.

"Most of his plays are tragi-comedies,—now sprightly and broadly humorous, now serious and solemn. The happiest efforts of his genius will perhaps be found in the tragic portions of these variegated dramas: they contain many a scene of elegant tenderness, of deep and quiet pathos, and express the feelings of honour, love, and friendship, in their highest fervour and refinement."—REV. "This work has long been a standard book in its class. It was designed to complete the work of Prideaux, which ends where that of Shuckford begins. It is not, however, equal in talent or interest to Prideaux, and the reader will find it necessary to examine Dr. Shuckford's opinions with care; especially in his Dissertation on the Creation and Fall of Man. The work was translated into French, and appeared at Leyden in 1738, in 2 vols. 8vo, and at Paris in 1752, 3 vols. 12mo."—Bibl. Bib., 403.

Sibbit, Adam. 1. Dissert. on Luxury, Lon., 1800, 8vo. 2. Thoughts on Divorces, 1800, 8vo.

Sibbs, or Sibbes, Richard, D.D., b. at Sudbury, Suffolk, 1577; educated at, and Fellow of, St. John's College, Cambridge; on being ordained, was chosen Lecturer of Trinity Church, Cambridge, the living of which he held during the last two years of his life; Preacher of Gray's Inn, 1618; Master of Catherine Hall, Cambridge, 1625; d. 1635. As a preacher he was famous, as a writer excellent; and it is a marvel that in this age of republication an edition of his works has not been given to the public,—especially as they have never been collected. There are, indeed, 3 vols. 8vo, (Lon., 1809; Aberdeen, 1812,) entitled Sibbs's Works; but the collection is incomplete, incorrectly printed, and contains neither the Prefaces, Dedications, nor Tables. Since the date of these volumes, Mr. Pickering has pub. several of his treatises, in 2 vols. 12mo, 1837–38, viz.: I. The Soul's Conflict, and Victory over itself by Faith: a Treatise of the Inward Disquietments of Distressed Spirits, with Comfortable Remedies to establish Them; II. The Bruised Reed and Smoking Flax; The Fountain Sealed; and a Description of Christ. A new ed. of his Divine Meditations was pub. 1838, 32mo.

Since the above was written there have been announced The Complete Works of Richard Sibbes, D.D.; Edited, with a Memoir, by Rev. A. B. Grosart, (Nichol's Stand. Div., Puritan Period,) Edin., 1862, 7 vols. 8vo.

"To my son Izaak I give Doctor Sibbes his Soul's Conflict, and to my daughter his Bruised Reed: desiring them to read them so as to be well acquainted with them."—Izaak Walton's Will.

Richard Baxter tells us (Autobiography) that Sibbs's Bruised Reed was the cause of his conversion; which, says Granger, (Biog. Hist.,) is enough to make it memorable. Archbishop Usher, Dr. Doddridge, Thomas Fuller, Erasmus Middleton, Edward Leigh, Job Orton, Neal, Brook, (Lives of the Puritans,) Williams, (C. P., ed. 1843, 306,) Bickersteth, (C. S., ed. 1844, 245,) all unite before us at this moment in commendation of Sibbs; but we lack space for their testimonies. See, also, Clark's Lives, at the end of the Martyrology. His Commentaries upon Hosea, 1639, (also 1641,) 4to, and those upon II. Corinthians chap. i., 1655, fol., (also 1656, 4to,) are among the works (see others in Watt's Bibl. Brit. and in Darling's Cyc. Bibl., i. 2736–38) which are not in the collection of his Works, in 3 vols. 8vo, above referred to.

"Of this blest man let this just praise be given:
Heaven was in him before he was in Heaven."

In 1837 Mr. Sibley became the editor, and afterwards the proprietor, of The American Magazine of Useful and Entertaining Knowledge; since 1841 he has edited all the Triennial Catalogues of Harvard University,—commencing in 1845 the insertion of obituary dates, a plan now generally followed, but then unknown,—and since the summer of 1850 all the Annual Catalogues of the University, of which two or three editions are published yearly, have been indebted to his editorial care. 2. Mr. Sibley is now engaged in collecting materials for an Athenæ Cantabrigienses, (we have ventured thus to suggest a name in advance,) which shall duly record the lives and literary achievements of the "worthies" of his alma mater. Such a chronicle, illustrated by the appropriate Fasti, would be indeed most valuable.

Sidney, or Sydney, Algernon, second surviving son of Robert, second Earl of Leicester of that creation, and of his wife, Dorothy, eldest daughter of Henry, Earl of Northumberland, and supposed to have been born in 1621 or 1622; after filling important public posts and distinguishing himself by his republican principles, was illegally convicted and executed for alleged complicity in the Rye-House Plot, Dec. 7, 1683. His attainder was reversed and his conviction condemned by the 7th Private Act of the first session of the first Parliament of William and Mary. Respecting his political life and character, which come not within the scope of our work, ample information will be found in the authorities subjoined. As an author he is known by Discourses concerning Government, Letters, and an Essay on Love. 1. Discourses concerning Government, pub. with a Preface by John Toland, Lon., 1698, fol.; 2d ed., 1704, fol.; 3d ed., 1751, fol.; 4th and 5th eds.: see HOLLIS, THOMAS, Nos. 2 and 3. No. 2, (infra,) it will be noticed, is in the 4th and 5th eds. There was also an ed. of the Discourses, with Life, Edin., 1750, 2 vols. 8vo; and The Essence of Algernon Sidney's Work on Government, to which is annexed his Essay on Love, by a Student of the Inner Temple, was pub. Lon., 1795, 8vo.

"Sidney's Discourses on Government, not published till 1698, are a diffuse reply to Filmer. They contain indeed many chapters full of historical learning and judicious reflection; yet the constant anxiety to refute that which needs no refutation renders them a little tedious. Sidney does not condemn a limited monarchy like the English, but his partiality is for a form of republic which would be deemed too aristocratical for our popular theories."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, iii. 440.

"In all the Discourses of Algernon Sidney upon Government we see constant indications of a rooted dislike to monarchy and ardent love of democracy; but not a sentence can we find that shows the illustrious author to have regarded the manner in which the people were represented as of any importance."—LORD BROUGHAM: Polit. Philos., Part 3, 2d ed., 1849, 88.

"They are admirably written, and contain great historical knowledge and a remarkable propriety of diction; so that his name, in my opinion, ought to be much higher established in the temple of literature than I have hitherto found it placed."—LORD ORRERY: Remarks on the Life and Writings of Swift, 236.

Mr. Hallam's estimate of the statesman is not so high:

"The whole of Sidney's conduct is inconsistent with his having possessed either practical good sense or a just appreciation of the public interests; and his influence over the whig party appears to have been entirely mischievous."—Ubi supra. See, also, 455–57.

Lord Macaulay is not disposed to question the honesty of Barillon's entry (see Dalrymple's Memoirs, 1773, 4to) which records a gift of 500 guineas to Mr. Sidney:

"It is impossible to see without pain such a name on the list of the pensioners of France; yet it is some consolation to reflect that, in our time, a public man would be thought lost to all sense of duty and of shame who should not spurn from him a temptation which conquered the virtue and the pride of Algernon Sidney."—Hist. of Eng., i., 1848, chap. ii. See, also, iii. chaps. xi. and xiv., and Macaulay's Essays.

Barthold Niebuhr thought better of Sidney—but we must refer to his Letters, and to the following authorities in addition to those already cited: Sydney's Self-Conviction, 1684, fol.; Sydney Redivivus, 1689; Sidney Letters, &c., pub. by Arthur Collins, 1746, 2 vols. fol.; Biog. Sidney, Edwin, of St. John's College, Cambridge, (1821,) Rector of Cornard Parva, Suffolk, late Rural Dean of the Diocese of Norwich, and Chaplain to Viscount Hill, has been twice Select Preacher at Cambridge, and for ten years lectured annually at the Royal Institution of Great Britain. His pamphlets in advocacy of the Asylum for Idiots have greatly aided that excellent establishment; and the author enjoys a high popularity in East Anglia as a preacher and lecturer. 1. Life of Rev. Sidney, or Sydney, Sir Henry, d. 1586, best known as the father of Sir Philip Sidney, would have been better known for his own merits had his son been less illustrious. He was the bosom friend of Edward VI., who expired in his arms, the favourite of Mary and of Elizabeth, Ambassador to France, for more than twenty years Lord President of Wales, and for eleven years Lord Deputy of Ireland; "learned in many languages, and a great lover of learning." He was a student of New College, Oxford, about 1543, according to Wood's surmise. The same authority (Athen. Oxon., vide Bliss's ed., i. 513) informs us that he left many MS. compositions, of which the writer had only seen the following: A Very Godley Letter, &c., vnto Phillip Sidney his Sonne then of tender yeeres at schoole in the towne of Shrewesbury with one M. Astone, 1591, sm. 8vo, pp. 16. See full title in Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 710: priced £25. It will be found, with some variations, in Letters and Memorials of State, written and collected by Sir Henry Sidney, Philip Sidney, and others; pub. by Arthur Collins, 1746, 2 vols. fol., some l. p. The Letter is also reprinted in the Harleian Miscellany, Biog. Brit., and Mrs. Davis's Life and Times of Sir P. Sidney. The ed. of 1591 contains A Postscript by my Lady Sidney, &c., which is not reprinted in Collins's Letters, &c., and an Epitaph of the Life and Death of the Lord President. The latter is in Cens. Lit.; the former in Park's Walpole's R. and N. Authors. See A Godlie Sermon, &c. at the Buriall of Sir Henrie Sidney, Knight, by Thos. White, 1586, 16mo; Naunton's Frag. Sidney, Mary, sister of Sir Philip Sidney, born probably about 1552, was married in 1576 to Henry, Earl of Pembroke, whom she survived twenty years, dying in 1621. The famous epitaph by which she is best known to the general reader is generally ascribed to Ben Jonson; but it is also claimed for William Browne, author of Britannia's Pastoralls, and will be found in a MS. volume of his poems in the Lansdowne Collection, No. 777. In many modern copies six lines added by her son William, Earl of Pembroke, (see his poems,) are given us as part of the original epitaph,—which really runs thus:

> "Underneath this sable herse
> Lyes the subject of all verse:—
> Sydney's Sister! Pembroke's Mother!
> Death, ere thou hast kill'd another,
> Fair, and learn'd, and good as she,
> Time shall throw his dart at thee!"

She acquired some reputation as a translator by the following: Antonius, a Tragedie, written in French by Ro. Garnier, with a Discourse of Life and Death, written in French by Ph. Mornay, both done into English by Mary Herbert, Countess of Pembroke, Lon., 1592, 4to. Rhodes, 1260, £8 12*s*. Also in 12mo. Antoine was repub. 1595, 12mo, (Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 544, £10 10*s*.,) it is said in 4to also; and the Discourse, 1600, 16mo, and 1607, 12mo. See Gabriel Harvey's Letter of Notable Contents, 1593; Restituta, by Sir S. E. Brydges; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1845, ii. 135, 364; Lon. Reader, 1865, ii. 204. There has recently appeared: A Poem: On our Saviour's Passion; by Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke; from an Unpublished MS. in the British Museum; with a Preface by the Editor, 1862, cr. 8vo.

"She continually reminds us of that devotional singer of another communion, Father Southwell."—Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 491.

Park (Walpole's R. & N. Authors) supposes that Sir Philip Sidney assisted in the translation of the Discourse. She was the author of An Elegy on Sir Philip Sidney, in Spenser's Astrophel, 1595; of A Pastoral Dialogue in Praise of Astræe, (Queen Elizabeth,) in Davison's Poetical Rhapsody, 1602; of The Countess of Pembroke's Passion, still in MS. in the British Museum; and is supposed to be co-author of the following, which remained in MS. until the date specified below: Psalms of David translated into Divers and Sundry Kindes of Verse by Sir Philip Sidney and the Countesse of Pembroke, with two Portraits, Chiswick, 1823, 12mo. 250 copies. Some of these had appeared in Sir John Harrington's Nugæ Antiquæ, and the 137th, somewhat altered, in The Guardian, No. 18. Anthony Wood (Athen. Oxon.) and Sir R. Steele (Guardian, No. 18) ascribe this book of translations to Sir Philip Sidney solely; Sir J. Harrington (Nugæ Antiquæ, iii.) and Dr. Thomas (Account of the Bishops of Exeter) call it the joint composition of the Countess of Pembroke and her chaplain, Dr. Gervase Babington, (vide p. 87, supra.) See, also, Holland's British Psalmists, i. 194, 197. Nor in enumerating this lady's services to the Republic of Letters should we omit to name her revision and improvement of her brother's Arcadia. Her praises were sung by Spenser in his Colin Clout's Come Home Again and his Ruins of Time, by Churchyard in his Pleasant Conceit, by Straddling in his Epigrammata; and the dedications of Fraunce, Daniel, and Morley are among the tributes to her merits. See Osborn's Memoirs; Ballard's Memoirs; Lodge's Portraits; Park's Walpole's R. and N. Authors; Zouch's Memoirs of Sir P. Sidney; Drake's Shakspeare and his Times; Costello's Em. Englishwomen; Rowton's Female Poets, 15; Bethune's British Female Poets, 24; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1845, ii. 129–36, 254–59, 364–70, (Lady Mary Sidney and her Writings.)

Sidney, Sir Philip, November 29, 1554–October 17, 1586, the eldest son of Sir Henry Sidney, (supra,) and his wife, Mary, daughter of the Duke of Northumberland, first opened his eyes at Penshurst Castle, the family seat, in the county of Kent, and—fortunately for the name which was thus redeemed from part of its well earned obloquy—was called Philip, in honour of the Spanish tyrant, then recently married to Mary of England.

Of his early days—as, indeed, of the whole of his brilliant career—we have a glowing eulogy from the biographer who coveted no higher title than that of THE FRIEND OF SIR PHILIP SIDNEY, (see GREVILLE, FULKE:)

"Of whose youth I will report no other wonder than this: That though I lived with him, and knew him from a child, yet I never knew him other than a man: with such staidness of mind, lovely and familiar gravity, as carried grace, and reverence above greater years. His talk ever of knowledge, and his very play tending to enrich his mind; so as even his teachers found something in him to observe, and learn, above that which they had usually read, or taught. Which eminence by nature and industry made his worthy father stile Sir Philip in my hearing (though I unseen) Lumen familiæ suæ."

At the age of twelve years, whilst at Shrewsbury School, he addressed to his father (then Lord President of Wales) the two epistles, one in Latin, the other in French, which elicited that Godly Letter of Sir Henry's, already noticed in our brief sketch of his life. In 1569 he was entered at Christ Church, Oxford, and, after there distinguishing himself, is said by Dr. Zouch (but not by Wood and his other earlier biographers) to have passed to Cambridge. But, according to the custom of his age and rank, his studies were to be continued abroad; and

"he had a licence from Queen Elizabeth, dated May 25, 1572, to go into parts beyond the seas, with three servants and four horses, and to remain the space of two years for his attaining the knowledge of foreign languages."—ARTHUR COLLINS: Memoirs of the Sidneys, prefixed to Letters and Memorials of State, &c., 1746, i. 98.

He presented himself at Paris, duly furnished with a letter of introduction from his uncle the Earl of Leicester, to the English ambassador, Sir Francis Walsingham, and was safely lodged in the house of that sagacious statesman during the horrors of the St. Bartholomew massacre, August, 1572. Saddened by this appalling exhibition of human depravity, he continued his travels, visiting Belgium, Germany, (at Frankfort securing the friendship of his learned correspondent Hubert Languet,) Hungary, and Italy. At Venice he devoted himself to horsemanship and other manly exercises. At Padua he appropriated eight months to Cicero, Plutarch, Petrarch, Boccaccio, Dante, and Ariosto.

In February, 1574, he returned to Venice; "and now," said, or thought, he, "I must see Rome also!"—a determination which his Protestant friend Languet, to Sidney's after-regret, successfully combated. At Venice he made the acquaintance of Edward, brother of Sir Henry Wotton, (the E. W. of his Defence of Poesie,) and, it is asserted, (but this is a matter of doubt,) of the poet Tasso. In May, 1575, he returned to England; and, thus thoroughly furnished, and favoured by his near relationship to Leicester, it is no marvel that he soon became noted as a most successful courtier. He reached home in time to participate in the gorgeous festivities of Kenilworth, "pedantically" chronicled by the "coxcomb" Robert Laneham, (vide p. 1056, supra,) and romantically pictured by the graphic pencil of Walter Scott. In 1576 "he was sent by Queen Elizabeth to condole the death of the Emperor Maximilian II., and to congratulate his successor, Rodolph II., upon his new dignity. But, under the shadow of this compliment, he waited, at the same time, upon such of the German Princes as were interested in the defence and preservation of the Protestant religion or their own native liberties; and prevailed upon them to enter into a religious League with England."

On his arrival in England in the next year, the ability displayed in this mission called forth the warmest eulogies of Walsingham, who rejoiced the heart of Sir Henry Sidney by a letter announcing

"the return of the young gentleman, your sonne, whose message verie sufficientlie performed, and the relatinge thereof, is no less gratefully received and well liked of Her Majestie, than the honourable opinion he hath left behinde him with all the princes with whomme he had to negotiate, hathe left a most sweet savor and grateful remembraunce of his name in those parts. . . . There hath not been any gentleman, I am sure, these many yeres, that hathe gon through so honourable a charge with as great commendacions as he."

Such a "sonne" was not to be rejected as a "sonne-in-law," and six years later (in 1583) the young diplomatist, crossed in love by the marriage of the Lady Penelope Devereux—the Philoclea of his Arcadia and the Stella of his poems—to Lord Rich, became the husband of Frances, the only daughter of Walsingham. This lady after his death became the wife of the Earl of Essex, Lady Rich's brother; and after his execution married the Earl of Clan-Ricard. But before his marriage Sidney had added to his eminent foreign successes on her Majesty's behalf a piece of domestic service of the most valuable kind,—the famous letter to the Queen dissuading her from the contemplated marriage with the Duke of Anjou, whose bold and romantic style of wooing at a later day (in 1581) threatened to overcome the personal defects of the swain and the political astuteness of the lady. Fortunately for England and England's Queen, the courtship proved unsuccessful; and to this result the logic and eloquence of Sidney's letter (see Strype's Annals of the Reformation and Hallam's Constit. Hist. of Eng.) not a little contributed.

This excellent epistle was written in 1579; and another fortunate event occurred in the next year,—the quarrel with the Earl of Oxford, which caused Sidney to retire in disgust from court and seek that repose at Wilton (the seat of his brother-in-law, the Earl of Pembroke) to which we are indebted for the romance consecrated to fraternal affection by the title of The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia. Commenced in 1580, this work was resumed from time to time, but left incomplete, on scattered leaves, at his death, six years later.

"One who writes himself G. M. [Gervase Markham] wrote the second and last part of the first book of the said Arcadia, making thereby a compleat end of the first history, Lond., 1613, qu. And in the eighth edit., printed at Lond., 1633, sir W. A., knight, [William Alexander, Earl of Stirling,] made a supplement of a defect in the third part of the history, and B. B., [see BELING, RICHARD,] of Linc. inn, esq., added then a sixth book thereunto." —WOOD: Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., i. 519.

Park corrects Wood's error in a note, (q. v.;) see, also, account of the editions of the Arcadia, infra. Sidney expressed a desire that the Arcadia should be destroyed. In 1581 Sir Philip represented the county of Kent in Parliament; in the same year he "was one of those noble gallants that performed, in the royal justings, barriers, and turney, for the entertainment of the Duke of Anjou," (as we have seen, again an unsuccessful suitor to the Virgin Queen;) and in this year also he found time from cares of state and revelry to devote many hours to his Defence of Poesie, which was circulated in manuscript several years before its appearance in print in 1595.

In 1583 he was knighted by his sovereign; in 1584 he wrote a Discourse in Defence of the Earl of Leicester, (pub. in Collins's Sidney Letters, &c., 1746, 2 vols. 4to,) an answer to Robert Parsons's attack entitled Leicester's Commonwealth; and in 1585 he set his heart upon joining Sir Francis Drake's second expedition against the Spaniards in the West Indies. Would that this project had been consummated!—but another fate was in reserve for one from whose eminent abilities many years of usefulness were reasonably anticipated. The Queen straitly forbade the voyage to America; and it is asserted by several ancient chroniclers (e.g. Naunton's Frag. Regal. and Fuller's Worthies) that in this year her Majesty's fear of "losing the jewel of her times" alone prevented his being placed in nomination for the crown of Poland: but this romantic story does not appear to be well founded. In June, 1585, a treaty was concluded between Elizabeth and the Seven United Provinces, and Sir Philip Sidney was appointed, by the former, Governor of Flushing, one of the cautionary towns held as security for the English advances. His new duties, on which he entered November 18, 1585, were most efficiently discharged; but the history of his brief and well-managed government enters not into the plan of this work. He was fatally wounded at the memorable battle of Zutphen, September 22, 1586, was carried to Arnheim, and there died on the 17th October ensuing. The touching instance of self-sacrificing generosity to a wounded soldier is too well known to permit another repetition in this place. His body was conveyed to Flushing, where it remained eight days; reached the Tower wharf, London, on the 5th of November, and lay in state in the Minories until the 16th of February, when it was interred with great pomp in St. Paul's Cathedral. Thus lived and thus died the famous Philip Sidney! He "trod from his cradle to his grave amid incense and flowers, and died in a dream of glory," (Effigies Poeticæ.) He left one child, Elizabeth, afterwards Countess of Rutland, who died without issue in 1613. The sensation produced throughout Europe by his death has perhaps never been equalled by the fall of any other uncrowned head. Among the tributes to his memory now displayed before us, as gathered from the past, are to be found those of kings and princes, noblemen and statesmen, soldiers and scholars. From these we would gladly quote, but, in default of space, must be content to refer the reader to authorities from which he can draw at his pleasure. Some opinions, however, on The Arcadia and The Defence of Poesie must not be omitted. The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia was first published Lon., 1590, 4to. The 2d edition, which was followed in the same volume by the author's Astrophel and Stella, and Sundry other Rare Sonnets of diuers Noblemen and Gentlemen, (these last—in all 108 sonnets and 11 songs—were all pub. together, in one volume 4to, in 1591,) and also Sonets, appeared in 1593, fol. All of the additions just enumerated are annexed also to all future editions of The Arcadia. The 3d issue was pub. 1598, fol.; the 4th issue, called the 3d edition, appeared Edin., 1599, fol.; the 5th issue, called the 4th edition, was pub. Lon., 1605, fol. The 6th issue, called the 4th edition,—which, in addition to the Arcadia, Five Books, The May Lady, Astrophel and Stella, &c., as above, contains also the Defence of Poesie,—was pub. 1613, fol. The 7th issue, called the 5th edition,—which includes A Supplement of a Defect in the Third Part of Sidney's Arcadia, by William Alexander, Earl of Stirling, (this Supplement appears to have been pub. separately also,) —appeared Dubl., 1621, fol. The Supplement appears in the subsequent editions also. The 8th issue, called the 6th edition, was pub. Lon., 1622, fol.; the 9th issue, 1623, fol.; the 10th issue, called the 6th edition, 1627, fol.; the 11th issue, called the 7th edition,—which contains an additional Supplement of a Defect in the Third Book, by Jas. Johnstoun, (q. v.,) also in the subsequent editions, and a 6th Book of the Arcadia, by Richard Beling, (q. v.,) both in one vol.,—1629, fol.; the 12th issue, called the 8th edition, 1633, fol.; the 13th issue, called the 9th edition, 1638, fol.; the 14th issue, 1647, fol.; the 15th issue, called the 10th edition, 1655, fol.; the 16th issue, called the 11th edition, 1662, fol.; the 17th issue, called the 12th edition, 1674, fol. Probably the issues of 1622 and 1623 are the same; and 1647 may be a misprint for 1674. The Works of Sir Philip Sidney, Knt., in Prose and Verse; The Fourteenth Edition, 1725, 3 vols. 8vo; new edition, Dubl., 1739, 3 vols. 12mo. In the edition of The Arcadia of 1662, fol., "are some things omitted in the 3 vols. of Works, 1725." The edition of 1725 contains: vol. i., Life; Criticisms on Pastoral Writing; The Arcadia, Books 1, 2; vol. ii., Arcadia, Books 3, 4, 5; vol. iii., Arcadia, Book 6, by R. B.; Poetical Works: Defence of Poesy; Astrophel and Stella, a Remedy for Love; Sonnets and Translations; The Lady of May; a Masque; Postscript. New edition of the Arcadia, with Notes, by the Author of "The Gentle Life," (Hans Friswell,) Lon., 1867, p. 8vo, 7*s.* 6*d.*; l. p., 15*s.*; Bost., Nov. 1867, cr. 8vo. What is called Sixth Book to Pembroke's Arcadia was pub. Dubl., 1624, 4to; A Continuation of Sir P. Sydney's Arcadia, Written by Mrs. A. W[eames], appeared Lon., 1651, 12mo, pp. 199; The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia, &c., Modernized by Mrs. Stanley, was pub. in 1725, fol. There have also been published versions of the Arcadia in Italian, French, Dutch, and other languages. See Bohn's Lowndes, Pt. 8, 1863, 2395; Collier's Bibl. Acct. of Early Eng. Lit., 1865.

Valour Anatomyzed in a Fancy, pub. 1581, 8vo, and at the end of Cottoni Posthuma, (see COTTON, SIR ROBERT BRUCE,) has been attributed by some to Sidney, by others to Sir Thomas Overbury. The Trewnesse of the Christian Religion, from the French of Philip of Mornay, translated by Sir Philip Sidney and Arthur Golding, (q. v.,) was pub. in 1587, 4to, and reprinted in 1592; and Almanzor and Almanzaida, a Novel, 1678, 12mo, was pub. in his name. There are two pieces ascribed to him in the Somers Collection. Respecting the version of the Psalms partially or wholly composed by him, see SIDNEY, MARY. See, also, PEARS, STEWART ADOLPHUS, No. 1, (Sidney's Correspondence with Languet;) PORTER, MISS JANE, No. 2, (Sidney's Aphorisms.)

His Defence of Poesie, first pub. in 1595, 4to, (reprinted, edited by E. Arber, 1869,) and, as we have seen, repub. in the same volume with the Arcadia, was also pub. in Glasgow, 1752, 12mo, and again issued with Observations on Poetry and Eloquence from the Discoveries of Ben Jonson, all in 1 vol. 8vo, very incorrectly printed, edited by Joseph Warton, in 1787. The Defence of Poesie was also privately printed by Lord Thurlow, (q. v.,) 1810, sm. 4to; and an edition (reviewed by Longfellow the poet, in N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1832, 56–78) was pub. in Hilliard & Brown's Library of the Old English Prose Writers, (vol. ii.,) Bost., 1831. It is also contained, together with Sidney's Sonnets, Masque, &c., and sixteen of his Letters, then first published, in The Miscellaneous Works of Sir Philip Sidney, Knt., with a Life of the Author and Illustrative Notes by William Gray, Esq., of Magdalen College and the Inner Temple, Oxford, 1829, p. 8vo; l. p., r. 8vo; repub., Boston, (T. O. H. P. Burnham,) 1860, sq. 8vo. This edition was reviewed in Lon. Month. Rev., May, 1829, 70. Fifteen of Sidney's poems are contained in England's Helicon, (see last ed., 1812;) others will be found in England's Parnassus and Davison's Rhapsody; and an ode entitled Sir Philip Sidney Lying on his Deathbed, attributed to his pen, has recently been first published entire: see Edwards's Memoirs of Libraries, 1859, i. 669–72. In an old folio copy of the Arcadia, preserved at Wilton, was discovered, in 1857, a lock of Queen Elizabeth's hair, presented to Sidney in 1573, and an original poem, in the autograph of the latter, complimenting the donor. (See Lon. Athen., 1858, i. 21.) See, also, A Brief Account of an Unique Edition of Sir Philip Sydney's Arcadia, by J. O. Halliwell, 1856, 4to.

THE ARCADIA.

Fulke Greville is not disposed to admit that Sidney's pen conveys a fair impression of the author. Of the Arcadia he remarks,

"Those that knew him well will truly confess it to be, both in form and matter, much inferior to that unbounded spirit of his, as the industry and images of other men's works are many times raised above the writers' capacities; and besides acknowledge that however he could not choose but give them aspersions of spirit and learning from the father, yet that they were scribbled rather as pamphlets for the entertainment of time and friends than any account of himself to the world; because, if his purpose had been to leave his memory in books, I am confident, in the right use of logic, philosophy, history, and poesie, nay, even in the most ingenious and mechanical arts, he would have showed such tracts of a searching and judicious spirit as the professors of every faculty would have striven no less for him than the seven cities did to have Homer of their sept; but the truth is, his end was not writing, even while he wrote, nor his knowledge moulded for tables and schools,—but both his wit and understanding bent upon his heart, to make himself and others, not in words or opinion, but in life and action, good and great."—Greville's Life of Sidney.

Gabriel Harvey rated the merits of the work much higher:

"Live ever, sweete, sweete booke: the simple image of his gentle witt, and the golden pillar of his noble courage; and ever notify unto the world that the writer was the secretary of eloquence, the breath of the muses, the honey-bee of the daintiest flowers of witt and arte, the pith of morale and intellectual virtues, the arme of Bellona in the field, the tongue of Suada in the chamber, the sprite of Practice in esse, and the paragon of excellency in print." (See Bibliotheca Heberiana, Part First, for a notice of a copy of the Arcadia with MS. notes by Harvey.)

But these exalted panegyrics on the author and his book were insufficient to awe the skeptical Horace Walpole into a respect for the one or warm him into admiration of the other. On the contrary, he did not scruple to shock the lovers of both by such irreverence as this:

"No man seems to me so astonishing an object of temporary admiration as the celebrated friend of the Lord Brooke, the famous Sir Philip Sidney. The learned of Europe dedicated their works to him; the republic of Poland thought him at least worthy to be in the nomination for their crown. All the muses of England wept his death. When we, at this distance of time, inquire what prodigious merits excited such admiration, what do we find? Great valour.—But it was an age of heroes. In full of all other talents, we have a tedious, lamentable, pedantic, pastoral romance, which the patience of a young virgin in love cannot now wade through; and some absurd attempts to fetter English verse in Roman chains; a proof that this applauded author understood little of the genius of his own language. The few of his letters extant are poor matters; one to a steward of his father, an instance of unwarrantable violence. By far the best presumption of his abilities (to us who can judge only by what we see) is a pamphlet published among the Sidney papers, being an answer to the famous libel called Leicester's Commonwealth. It defends his uncle with great spirit. What has been said in derogation to their blood seems to have touched Sir Philip most. He died with the rashness of a volunteer, having lived to write with the sang-froid and prolixity of Mademoiselle Scuderi."—Royal and Noble Authors: Lord Brooke.

See Park's ed., ii. 222, and Park's note on this critique,—which was also attacked by a writer in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1767, 57; by Sir S. E. Brydges, in his ed. of Phillips's Theat. Poet. Anglic., ed. 1800, 139; by Hallam, in his Lit. Hist. of Europe; by Disraeli, in Lon. Quar. Rev., Feb. 1809, (repub. in his Amenities of Literature;) and by others. See Zouch's (ZOUCH, THOMAS, D.D., No. 5) Memoirs of Sidney, 155. The critic of the magazine quotes a great authority in favour of the Arcadia:

"The true spirit and vein of ancient poetry in this kind seems to shine most in Sir Philip Sidney, whom I esteem both the greatest poet and the noblest genius of any that have left writings in our own or any other modern language."—SIR WM. TEMPLE: Essay on Poetry.

Walpole's dislike of the Arcadia was no greater than Hazlitt's:

"Sir Philip Sidney is a writer for whom I cannot acquire a taste. As Mr. Burke said he 'could not love the French Republic;' so I may say that I cannot love 'the Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia,' with all my good will to it. . . . It is to me one of the greatest monuments of the abuse of intellectual power upon record. It puts one in mind of the court dresses and preposterous fashions of the time, which are grown obsolete and disgusting. It is not romantic, but scholastic; not poetry, but casuistry; not nature, but art, and the worst sort of art, which thinks it can do better than nature. Of the number of fine things that are constantly passing through the author's mind, there is hardly one that he has not contrived to spoil, and to spoil purposely and maliciously, in order to aggrandize our idea of himself. Out of five hundred folio pages, there are hardly, I conceive, half a dozen sentences expressed simply and directly, with the sincere desire to convey the image implied, and without a systematic interpolation of the wit, learning, ingenuity, wisdom, and everlasting impertinence of the writer, so as to disguise the object, instead of displaying it in its true colours and real proportions."—Lects. on the Dramat. Art of the Age of Elizabeth, Lect. VI., (q. v.)

But let us have something on the other side of the question:

"There are passages in this work exquisitely beautiful,—useful observations on life and manners, a variety and accurate discrimination of characters, fine sentiments, expressed in strong and adequate terms, animated descriptions, equal to any that occur in the ancient or modern poets, sage lessons of morality, and judicious reflections on government and policy. A reader who takes up the volume may be compared to a traveller who has a long and dreary road to pass. The objects that successively meet his eye may not in general be very pleasing, but occasionally he is charmed with a more beautiful prospect, with the verdure of a rich valley, with a meadow enamelled with flowers, with a murmur of a rivulet, the swelling grove, the hanging rock, the splendid villa. These charming objects abundantly compensate for the joyless regions he has traversed. They fill him with delight, exhilarate his drooping spirits, and, at the decline of day, he reposes with complacency and satisfaction."—THOMAS ZOUCH, D.D.: Memoirs of the Life and Writings of Sir Philip Sidney, York, 1808, 4to.

"'The Arcadia,' with all the imperfections that can be laid to its charge, is a rich mint of deep feeling and of varied excellence. It displays a fancy, it is true, which often runs riot amid the diversity of its creations, and a taste that sometimes erred from the infinite seductions to which it was exposed. But the work invariably makes atonement by the stately eloquence of its descriptions, and by the delicious incense which it offered up to the cause of virtue and true heroism."—WILLIAM GRAY: Miscell. Works of Sir Philip Sidney, Oxf., 1829, p. 8vo and r. 8vo.

"'The Arcadia' was not one of those spurious fictions invented at random, where an author has little personal concern in the narrative he forms. When we forget the singularity of the fable, and the masquerade dresses of the actors, we pronounce them to be real personages, and that the dramatic style distinctly conveys to us incidents which, however veiled, had occurred to the poet's own observation, as we perceive that the scenes which he has painted with such precision must have been localities. The characters are minutely analyzed, and so correctly preserved, that their interior emotions are painted forth in their gestures as well as revealed in their language. The author was himself the tender lover whose amorous griefs he touched with such delicacy, and the undoubted child of chivalry he drew; and in these finer passions he seems only to have multiplied himself. . . . It is the imperishable diction, the language of Shakspeare, before Shakspeare wrote, which diffuses its enchantment over 'The Arcadia;' and it is for this that it should be studied; and the true critic of Sidney, because the critic was a true poet, offers his unquestioned testimony in Cowper,—

'SIDNEY, WARBLER OF POETIC PROSE!'"

ISAAC DISRAELI: Amenities of Lit.

"Besides its excellent language, rare contrivances, and delectable stories, [it] hath in it all the strains of poesy, comprehendeth the universal art of speaking, and, to them who can discern and will observe, affordeth notable rules for demeanour both private and public."—PETER HEYLIN: Descrip. of Arcadia ir. Greece.

"The first good prose writer, in any positive sense of the word, is Sir Philip Sidney. . . . It does not appear to me that the Arcadia is more tiresome and uninteresting [the reference here is to Walpole's complaint, ut supra] than the generality of that class of long romances, proverbially among the most tiresome of all books; and in a less fastidious age it was read, no doubt, even as a story, with some delight. It displays a superior mind, rather complying with a temporary taste than affected by it, and many pleasing passages occur, especially in the tender and innocent loves of Pyrocles and Philoclea. I think it, nevertheless, on the whole, inferior in sense, style, and spirit to the Defence of Poesy. . . . Hakewill goes much too far in calling Sidney's Arcadia 'nothing inferior to the choicest piece among the ancients'!"—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 196, 217, iii. 337. See, also, 553.

"There is no work, in short, in the department of prose fiction which contains more apothegmatic wisdom than the Arcadia of Sidney; and it is to be regretted that the volume which had charmed a Shakspeare, a Milton, [who does not let it escape without censure,] and a Waller, [see his verses on Sacharissa,] and which has been praised by Temple, by Heylin, and by Cowper, should be suffered, in any deference to the opinion of Lord Orford, to slumber on the shelf."—DR. DRAKE: Shaksp. and his Times, i. 551; and see Index.

Dr. Drake expresses a very different opinion in his Essays illustrative of the Tatler, Spectator, &c., ii. 9. See, also, Sir Philip Sidney and the Arcadia, by J. DEFENCE OF POESY.

"It belongs to the small number of those happy creations which he alone could either have produced or devised who has been touched and purified with the sacred fire of true genius. Originally designed as an answer to certain diatribes of the Puritans,—a sect which was then springing rapidly into notice, and beginning to signalize itself by an austere and fierce aversion to all the elegant recreations of society and of mind,—it remains an imperishable monument of the digested learning of its author, and of the engaging facility with which he could turn his talents to account. It has been aptly described in his own words as the 'sweet food of sweetly uttered knowledge,' as the outpouring and register of those 'high-erected thoughts' which are solely to be found seated in their purity 'in a heart of courtesy.' At the same time, it contains few of those mannerisms and studied affectations of his day with which, it must be confessed, his larger work is often deformed. This is, on the contrary, a plain and practical treatise, seeking above all things to carry conviction by its illustrations and its arguments, and making fancy and ornament entirely subservient to the cause of persuasion and of truth. Yet the imaginative genius of the author frequently bursts forth in all its splendour, and strews his didactic path with a galaxy of the most brilliant conceptions. He seems here to follow religiously the memorable advice with which his muse favoured him on another occasion,—'Look in thy heart and write.'"—WILLIAM GRAY: Miscell. Works of Sir P. Sidney.

"This delightful piece of criticism exhibits the taste and erudition of Sir Philip in a striking light; the style is remarkable for amenity and simplicity; the laws of the Drama and Epopœa are laid down with singular judgment and precision, and the cause of poetry is strenuously and successfully supported against the calumny and abuse of the puritanical scowlers, one of whom had the effrontery to dedicate to him his collection of scurrility, in the very title-page of which he classes poets with pipers and jesters, and terms them the 'caterpillars of the commonwealth.' [See GOSSON, STEPHEN, No. 1.]"—DR. DRAKE: Shaksp. and his Times, i. 467.

"Sidney, in this luminous criticism and effusion of poetic feeling, has introduced the principal precepts of Aristotle, touched by the fire and sentiments of Longinus, and, for the first time in English literature, has exhibited the beatitude of criticism in a poet-critic."—ISAAC DISRAELI: Amenities of Lit.

"Sidney's Defence of Poesie, as has been surmised by his last editor, was probably written about 1581. I should incline to place it later than The Arcadia; and he may perhaps allude to himself where he says, 'some have mingled matters heroical and pastoral.' This treatise is elegantly composed, with perhaps too artificial a construction of sentences; the sense is good, but the expression is very diffuse, which gives it too much the air of a declamation. The great praise of Sidney in this treatise is, that he has shown the capacity of the English language for spirit, variety, gracious idiom, and masculine firmness. It is worth notice that under the word poesy he includes such works as his own Arcadia, or, in short, any fiction: 'It is not rhyming and versing that maketh poesy; one may be a poet without versing, and a versifier without poetry.' . . . The Defence of Poesy has already been reckoned among the polite writings of the Elizabethan age, to which class it rather belongs than to that of criticism; for Sidney rarely comes to any literary censure, and is still farther removed from any profound philosophy. His sense is good, but not ingenious, and the declamatory tone weakens its effect."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, ii. 197, 211. See, also, 124, 169, and Index.

"The Defence of Poetry is a work of rare merit. It is a golden little volume, which the scholar may lay beneath his pillow, as Chrysostom did the works of Aristophanes. We do not, however, mean to analyze it in this place; but recommend our readers to purchase this 'sweet food of sweetly uttered knowledge.' It will be read with delight by all who have a taste for the true beauties of poetry, and may go far to remove the prejudices of those who have not."—HENRY W. LONGFELLOW: N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1832, 56–78, (Defence of Poetry.)

Mr. Longfellow has presented a very successful "Defence of Poetry" in his own popular volumes. We have seen that Horace Walpole abused The Arcadia: he did worse by the Defence of Poesy:

"I have been blamed for not mentioning Sir Philip's Defence of Poetry, which some think his best work. I had indeed forgot it when I wrote this article; a proof that I at least did not think it sufficient foundation for so high a character as he acquired. This was all my criticism pretended to say, that I could not conceive how a man who in some respects had written dully and weakly, and who, at most, was far inferior to our best authors, had obtained such immense reputation. Let his merits and his fame be weighed together, and then let it be determined whether the world has overvalued, or I undervalued, Sir Philip Sidney."—Note to 2d ed. of his R. and N. Authors: see Park's ed., ii. 222, n. See, also, Walpole's Letters, ed. 1861, ii. 23, 302, iii. 151.

See, also, W. A. Jones's Characters and Criticisms, ii. 61–69; Retrospec. Rev., x., 1824, 43–60, (and in Phila. Museum, xxxii. 343.) Hazlitt esteems Sidney's Sonnets as little as he does his Arcadia; but we must be content to refer to his Lectures on the Dramat. Lit. of the Age of Elizabeth, Lect. VI., not forgetting to prescribe as an antidote Charles Lamb's essay on Some Sonnets of Sir Philip Sydney, (see Crosby, Nichols, Lee & Company's beautiful edition of Lamb's Works, Bost., 1860, 4 vols. 12mo:) in which, by the way, The Arcadia is also defended against Hazlitt. Dr. Drake's comments, also, on Sidney's Sonnets (in Shaksp. and his Times) must be pondered by the student. Sigourney, Lydia Huntley, formerly Miss Huntley, b. September 1, 1791, in Norwich, Connecticut, was "almost from infancy remarkable for a love of knowledge, and facility in its acquisition. She read with fluency when but three years of age; and at eight she wrote verses which attracted attention among the acquaintances of her family." At the age of nineteen, in company with an intimate friend, Miss Ann Maria Hyde, (vide No. 2, infra,) she established a female school at Norwich, and two years later removed to Hartford, where she also engaged in the duties of instruction. In 1819 she was married to Mr. Charles Sigourney, of Hartford, where Mrs. Sigourney resided until her death, June 10, 1865.

"Mrs. Sigourney appears to have the power of writing extempore on passing events at the moment they are called for. But few persons, especially of poetic genius, have ever possessed this power. . . . Those powers are twice valuable that can well accomplish their purpose on demand. Certainly as it regards poetic gifts, they who give promptly give twice."—MARIA EDGEWORTH: quoted in National Portrait-Gallery, iv. 7.

"The moral character of her writings is unexceptionable. She possesses great facility in versification, and is fluent both in thoughts and language. But much that she has written is deformed by the triteness and irregularity consequent upon hasty composition, and hardly does justice to her real powers. 'Niagara,' 'The Death of an Infant,' 'Winter,' and 'Napoleon's Epitaph,' are favourable specimens of her talents."—EDWIN P. WHIPPLE: N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1844, 34.

See a new book,—Old England: its Scenery, Art, and People, by James M. Hoppin, 1867, 16mo.

Prof. Silliman edited three editions—the last from 6th Lon. ed., Bost., 1814, 2 vols. 8vo—of William Henry's Elements of Chemistry, and three editions—N. Haven, 8vo, 1829, 1833, 1839, (from 5th Lon. ed.)—of Robert Bakewell's Introduction to Geology. (See Lon. Philos. Mag., Oct. 1828.) The Treatise on The Philosophy of Geology, which was appended to the ed. of 1839, was pub. separately in London in 1839: see Lon. Athen., 1839, 946.

In 1818 he founded the American Journal of Science and Arts, (by which his name is so widely and honourably known,) already several times noticed in this volume, (BRUCE, ARCHIBALD, M.D.; DANA, PROFESSOR JAMES DWIGHT; HITCHCOCK, EDWARD, D.D., LL.D., &c.) With the First Series (50 vols., 1818–45) he was particularly identified, but retained his interest in this invaluable thesaurus to the close of his life. The First Series was pub. quarterly; the New Series appears bi-monthly; and we presume that the demands of science will ere long convert it into a monthly. For notices of it we refer to N. Amer. Rev., xiii. (July, 1821) 247, (by Edward Everett;) Everett's Orations and Speeches, iii. (1859) 430; Amer. Whig Rev., vi. 81; Blackw. Mag., xvii. 201, xviii. 590; Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., 1859, 19–20.

Notices of the excellent and learned Silliman (of whom a bust, executed in 1862,, by C. Ives, will be found in the library of Yale College) will be found in Goodrich's Recollections, ubi supra; Amer. Whig. Rev., xiv. 1, (with a portrait;) Eclec. Mag. of For. Simeon of Durham, a monk of the monastery and precentor of the cathedral of that place, and teacher of the sciences—especially of the mathematics—at the University of Oxford, is supposed to have died about 1130. His name is attached to Historia de Gestis Regum Anglorum, A.D. 616–1129, (a large part of which is copied from Florence of Worcester's Chronicle, itself a compilation,) continued by John, Prior of Hexham, to 1156, and to Historia Dunelmensis Ecclesiæ, (really Turgot's History,) already mentioned under BEDFORD, THOMAS, (some copies l. p.) Both of these works were pub. in Twysden's Historiæ Anglicanæ Scriptores Decem, Lon., 1652, 2 vols. fol.; and the Historia de Gestis Regum Anglorum ab A.D. DC.XVI. adusque A.D. DCCCC.VII., in vol. i., pp. 645–688, of Collection of Historians edited by order of the Record Commission. See Wright's Biog. Brit. Lit., Anglo-Norman Period, 101–103, and authorities there cited.

Simeon, Charles, an excellent and useful divine, brother to the late Sir John Simeon, Master in Chancery, was b. at Reading, Sept. 24, 1759; educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, of which he became Fellow; ordained Deacon, 1782; presented to the living of Christ Church, Cambridge, 1783, and retained it until his death, Nov. 13, 1836. His first publication was Claude's Essay on the Composition of a Sermon; with an Appendix containing One Hundred Skeletons of Sermons, 1796, 8vo; which was followed by The Gospel Message; a Sermon, with Four Skeletons of Sermons, (intended as an appendix to his edition of Claude's Essay,) also 1796, 8vo. See ROBINSON, RICHARD, No. 4. He next pub. Helps to Composition; or, Six Hundred Skeletons of Sermons, 1801–2, 5 vols. 8vo, (some r. 8vo;) 2d ed., 1808; 3d ed., 1815. To this succeeded, from time to time, a number of sermons and papers, and a new impression of Jenks's Prayers, &c., (see JENKS, BENJAMIN,) of which the 13th ed. (of Simeon's issue) was pub. 1859, 12mo. See, also, WALKER, SAMUEL, No. 2. His best-known work is the Horæ Homileticæ; or, Discourses (in the Form of Skeletons) upon the Whole Scriptures, 1819–20, 11 vols. 8vo, (some of the early vols. bear date 1815 and 1818;) Appendix, 1828, 6 vols. 8vo. These volumes and the other publications (save a few controversial pamphlets) of the author are comprised in Simeon's Works: Horæ Homileticæ; or, Discourses, (principally in Form of Skeletons,) now first digested into one continued series, and forming a Commentary upon every Book of the Old and New Testament; with Claude's Essay, and Indexes; Edited by the Rev. Thomas Hartwell Horne, 1832–33, (new title-pages, 1836, 1837, 1840, 1844, 1848, 1855,) 21 vols. 8vo, £10 10*s.*; reduced to £7 7*s.* A few copies on l. p., r. 8vo.

"The works of Simeon, containing 2536 discourses on the principal passages of the Old and New Testament, will be found peculiarly adapted to assist the studies of the young clergy in their preparations for the pulpit; they will likewise serve as a Body of Divinity, and are by many recommended as a Biblical Commentary, well adapted to be read in families. . . . "One of the noblest offerings that consecrated hand ever laid on the altar."—Lon. Chris. Observer.

Of the £5000 paid by Mr. Cadell for the copyright, Mr. Simeon appropriated £1000 to the Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews, £1000 to the London Clerical Education Society, £1000 to the Church Missionary Society, and £210 to the binding of 20 large-paper copies, (received from Mr. Cadell,) presented by him to dignitaries and libraries. This valuable series is now pub. by Henry G. Bohn, (London,) who has recently issued a new edition of Simeon's Select Works, 1854, 2 vols. 32mo. Contents: 1. Excellence of the Liturgy; 2. Humiliation of the Son of God; 3. Office of the Holy Spirit; 4. Appeal to Men of Wisdom and Candour; 5. Discourses on Behalf of the Jews; 6. The Christian's Armour. The six are also sold separately (1838–9–40) in 32mo; and Simeon and Horne's ed. of Claude's Essay (1848) in 8vo. See Memoirs of Simeon, by Rev. Simms, William Gilmore, LL.D., one of the most voluminous and popular of American authors, was b. April 17, 1806, in Charleston, South Carolina, and admitted to the Bar of that State at the age of twenty-one. That love of letters, however, which had manifested itself from his boyhood soon rendered irksome the exactions of a proverbially "jealous mistress;" and an editorial connection with the columns of the Charleston City Gazette was the commencement of a literary career of great activity and more than ordinary success. His remarkable versatility of talent will be best illustrated by a classified catalogue of the miscellaneous library which he has given to the public.

I. Poetry.

1. Lyrical and other Poems, Charles., 1827, 18mo. 2. Early Lays, 1827, 12mo. See South. Lit. Mess., vi. 36, 290, 444, 836. 3. The Vision of Cortes, and other Poems, 1829. 4. Donna Florida; a Tale, Charles., 1843, 18mo. Privately printed. 8. Grouped Thoughts and Scattered Fancies: Sonnets, Richmond, 1845, 18mo. 9. Areytos; or, Songs of the South, Charles., 1846, 12mo. 10. Lays of the Palmetto, 1848, 12mo. 11. The Eye and the Wing; Poems, chiefly Imaginative; The Cassique of Acceba, &c., N. York, 1848, 8vo. 12. Charleston and her Satirists; a Satire, Charles. 13. The City of the Silent; a Poem, 1850. 14. Poems, Descriptive, Dramatic, Legendary, Contemplative, &c., N. York, 1854, 2 vols. 12mo.

Of the above, Nos. 1, 2, 4, 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, and 12 are out of print, and suppressed. Reviews of Simms's poetry, in addition to those above and below cited, will be found in South. Lit. Mess., iii. 353, 367, 619, 666, iv. 79, x. 18; Democrat. Rev., xiii. 486, xviii. 91.

II. Dramas.

15. Norman Maurice; or, The Man of the People. Commended by G. P. R. James. 16. Michael Bonham; or, The Fall of the Alamo; a Tragedy. Acted at Charleston for three nights with success.

Mr. Simms also altered for the stage Shakspeare's Timon of Athens.

III. Novelettes.

17. Martin Faber, N. York, 1833, 12mo; with other Tales, 1836, 2 vols. 12mo. Martin Faber was reviewed in the Knickerbocker by T. Flint. 18. Carl Werner, and other Tales, 1838, 2 vols. 12mo. 19. XI. Criticism.

56. Views and Reviews in American History, Literature, and Fiction: 1st Ser., N. York, 1845, 12mo; 2d Ser., 1846, 12mo. These volumes (see the reviews of them in South. Lit. Mess., xiii. 250; South. Lit. Jour., i. 39; N. Amer. Rev., lxiii. 357, by C. C. Felton; and Lon. Athen., 1846, 709) are a selection from Mr. Simms's contributions to periodical literature, with which he was largely interested for many years: being connected editorially with The Southern Literary (monthly) Gazette, 1825, 2 vols.; The Cosmopolitan, an Occasional; The Magnolia, or Southern Apalachian, 1842–3; The Southern and Western Monthly Magazine and Review, 1845, 2 vols., and The Southern Quarterly Review, (revived by his energy and talent,) 1849–55; and a contributor to The American Quarterly Review, American Monthly Magazine, Southern Literary Messenger, The Orion, The Knickerbocker, Godey's, Graham's, The Great Republic, Lippincott's Monthly Magazine, &c.

XII. Miscellaneous Pamphlets.

57. Slavery in the South, Richmond, 1831. 58. The Social Principle; an Oration, 1842. 59. The Swords of American Independence; an Oration, 1844. 60. Self-Development; an Oration, 1847. 61. The Battle of Fort Moultrie; a Discourse.

Mr. Simms is also editor of A Supplement to the Plays of William Shakespeare, comprising the Seven Dramas which have been ascribed to his pen, but which are not included in his Writings in Modern Editions; with Notes, and an Introduction to each Play, N. York, 1848, 8vo; and he is the author of a number of articles (Charleston, the lives of Senator Butler, Henry Laurens, John Laurens, and Hugh S. Legare, and perhaps other papers) in Appleton's American Cyclopædia. To this not meagre list of productions should be added two courses of Lectures, of three each, On Poetry and the Practical, and The Moral Character of Hamlet; and the commencement of an elaborate autobiography. Of some of his works (of which we have generally given the dates of the first publication only) a number of editions have appeared; some have been republished in England; and several have been translated into French and German. To supply the home demand, a uniform edition of "Simms's Revolutionary and Border Romances of the South," (completed in 1859,) with Illustrations by Darley, is published by J. S. Redfield, New York, in 18 vols. 12mo, viz.: I. The Partisan. II. Mellichampe. III. Katherine Walton. IV. The Scout. V. Woodcraft. VI. The Forayers. VII. Eutaw. VIII. Guy Rivers. IX. Richard Hurdis. X. Border Beagles. XI. Charlemont. XII. Beauchampe. XIII. Confession. XIV. The Yemassee. XV. Vasconselos. XVI. Southward Ho! XVII. Wigwam and Cabin. XVIII. The Cassique of Kiawah. To this series is added—Vols.

'XIX. and XX.—Simms's Poems, Dramatic, Contemplative, &c. Repub., (excluding XVIII.,) Prose Works, 1865, 17 vols. 12mo, and Poems, 1864, 2 vols. 12mo. The large space occupied in the enumeration of the works of this author precludes the quotation of critical opinions; but to a number of these the reader has already been referred, and we extend the list by the addition of Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America, 16th ed., 1855, 343; Griswold's Prose Writers of America, 4th ed., 1852, 30, 34, 40, 43, 503; Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., 1856, ii. 427; Homes of American Authors, 1855, 257, (by William C. Bryant,) with a view of Woodlands, Mr. Simms' Country Residence, Barnwell District, South Carolina; Poe's Marginalia, clxxi.; Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., ed. 1859, lv.; Internat. Mag., April, 1852, 433; South. Lit. Rev., ix. 155, (Simms as a Political Writer.) Absorbed in the extent of Mr. Simms's literary engagements, we have forgotten to state that the boy designed for a doctor, admitted in maturer years as a lawyer, practising as a littérateur, and more recently as a planter, has also been a politician. He was for several years a prominent member of the South Carolina Legislature; and in December, 1846, escaped by only one vote the responsibilities of Lieutenant-Governor of his State. Mr. Simms's last publications were: 62. The Ghost of my Husband; a Tale of the Crescent City, N. York, 1866, 16mo. 63. War Poetry of the South; Edited, 1867, 12mo, pp. viii., 482. He has in preparation a School History of South Carolina; and is announced as one of the prospective contributors to Southern Society, a weekly, of which No. 1 is to be published at Baltimore, Oct. 1867.

Simond, Louis, although born and educated in France, was Americanized by a twenty years' residence in the United States, and Anglicized by travels in England, marrying an Englishwoman, and a better English style (for which see his books, ut infra) than most natives attain,—and therefore shall not be denied a few lines in a Dictionary of British and American Authors.

Simpson, T. G. Letter to Rt. Hon. William Pitt, 1791, 8vo.

Simpson, Thomas, b. at Market-Bosworth, Leicestershire, 1710, enjoyed no advantages of early education, and followed his father's trade of weaving, combined with mathematical studies, and instruction to pupils, until 1743, when he was appointed Professor of Mathematics in the Royal Academy at Woolwich, which post he held until within a few months of his death, May 14, 1761. He was the author of the following valuable works: 1. New Treatise of Fluxions, Lon., 1737, 4to; 1750, 2 vols. 8vo; 1776, 2 vols. 8vo; by Davis, 1808, 8vo, with Appendixes, 2 vols. 8vo. 2. Nature and Laws of Chance, 1740, 4to; new ed., 8vo. 3. Essays in Mathematics, 1740, 4to. 4. Doctrine of Annuities and Reversions, 1742, 8vo; Appendix, 1743; new ed. of book, 1773, 8vo. 5. Mathematical Dissertations, 1743, 4to. 6. Treatise of Algebra, 1745, 8vo; 6th ed., 1790; new ed., 8vo. 7. Theorems of Mathematics, Edin., 1746, 8vo. 8. Elements of Plane Geometry, Lon., 1747, '60, '68, 8vo; new ed., 8vo. 9. Trigonometry, Plane and Spherical, 1748, 8vo; 1779, 4to. See Lon. Quar. Rev., iv. 393. 10. Select Exercises for Young Proficients in the Mathematiks, 1752, 8vo; with Account of his Life and Writings, by Charles Hutton, LL.D., 1792, 8vo; by Hearding, 1810, 8vo. 11. Miscellaneous Tracts, &c. in Mechanics, Physical Astronomy, and Speculative Mathematics, 1757, 4to. The most highly esteemed of his works. He contributed mathematical papers to Phil. Trans. (see Watt's Bibl. Brit.) and to the Ladies' Diary, of which he was editor from 1754 to 1760, both inclusive, and was supposed to be editorially connected with The Mathematician and Turner's Mathematical Exercises, (1750, '51, &c.) See Life by Hutton, ut supra, No. 10; Hutton's Dict.; Nichols's Leicestershire; Lon. Gent. Mag., liii.; Gibbon's Miscell. Works, ed. 1837, 232; Encyc. Brit., 8th ed., Index.

Simpson, Thomas, Chief Trader of the Hudson's Bay Company, a native of Dingwall, Ross-shire, Scotland, blew out his brains, after killing two of his party, in a fit of insanity, at Turtle River, North America, June, 1840, when on the way to England after the successful expedition already noticed in our life of his uncle, Sir George Simpson. See, also, SIMPSON, ALEXANDER, No. 2; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1840, ii. 548, (Obituary.) He went to Hudson's Bay in 1829, and at the time of his decease was about 32 years of age. After his death, appeared Narrative of the Discoveries on the North Coast of America effected by the Officers of the Hudson's Bay Company during the Years 1836–39, Lon., 1843, 8vo. Reviews of this interesting volume will be found in Lon. Quar. Rev., Dec. 1843, (same in Liv. Age, li.,) by Sir John Barrow; Lon. Athen., 1843, 725; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1843, 539, 805.

"The works of Patrick Simson contain a succinct History of the Christian Church, written in a style which, though not correct, is spirited, and breathes a classical air."—Dr. McCrie: Life of Melville.

A Record of the Life and Death of Patrick Simsone, and a Sermon on his Death, by Archibald Simsone, (supra,) will be found in Select Biographies, ed. for the Wodrow Society by Rev. W. K. Tweedie, i. 63, 113.

Simson, Robert, 1687–1768, a native of Ayrshire, entered the University of Glasgow, 1701; was appointed Professor of Mathematics in that institution in 1711; taught five days in the week until 1758, when he began to employ aid, and in 1761 was instrumental in the appointment of his assistant and successor, the Rev. Dr. Williamson. His uncommon abilities, and especially his successful efforts towards the restoration of the works of the Greek geometers, gave him a distinguished rank among the teachers of his profession. 1. "Perhaps the selection should have been carried further. This edition is correct and creditable to the compiler, and has obtained prodigious success. Nay, the very Scotticisms with which it abounds appear now to be adopted at Oxford and Cambridge as the appropriate diction of the Ancient Geometry."—PROFESSOR JOHN LESLIE: *Fourth Prelim. "besides many fine geometrical speculations, contains the first satisfactory exposition of Porisms, of which the definition advanced by Pappus had been commonly regarded as an incomprehensible enigma. But, from the unvarying tenor of his studies, the Scotch professor became a rigorist for the Ancient Analysis, and rejected with disdain the most obvious improvements in the form of exhibition."—PROF. JOHN LESLIE: Fourth Prelim. Dissert., Encyc. Brit., 7th ed.

"There needs no panegyric of this most admirable performance. Its great merit is best estimated by the view which has been taken of the extraordinary difficulties overcome by it, . . . a treatise in which the lovers of geometrical science must ever find the purest delight."—LORD BROUGHAM: ubi infra.

Sir John Sinclair, (infra,) at the age of fourteen was duly appointed her father's amanuensis, and for many years devoted five to six hours daily to writing from his dictation. Fortunately for the reading public, she also handled the pen on her own account; and the following list of her works, to which others might be added, testifies to no ordinary amount of literary industry. Of the above, originally issued at Edinburgh and London, and some at Ipswich, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 15, 18, and 23 have been reprinted at New York. Of Nos. 3, 4, 6, 9, 11, 16, and 18, and perhaps of some of the others, the sale in Great Britain and America has been large. Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 12, 16, 18, 21, and 23 form the 12 vols., fp. 8vo, April, 1860–March, 1861, of The Cheap Library, (London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co., Ipswich: J. M. Burton & Co.) Of some of Miss Sinclair's books we have more commendatory notices before us than we have room to quote or even time to count. This excellent lady for some years before her death was engaged in "the superintendence of a charitable institution for the widows of officers of the army; a charge which was bequeathed her, together with a large income, by a lady whose partiality originated solely in a knowledge of her writings, although it was subsequently matured by personal intercourse." She was also active in other good works.

"Miss Sinclair is already so popular, so justly a favourite, that the characteristics of her style are thoroughly known. The present work has in undiminished strength the sparkling vivacity of dialogue, the unfailing wit, and useful tendency which mark its predecessors."—Dubl. Univ. Mag.: notice of Modern Flirtations.

"A clever and popular writer, whose pen is ever ready for the illustration and enforcement of truth as well as for the revelation of sin and error."—Lon. Spectator: notice of Modern Accomplishments.

A collective edition of the Pithy, Pleasaunt, and Profitable Workes of Maister Skelton, Poete Laureate, Nowe collected and newly published, appeared in 1568, 8vo, (see Typ. Antiq., iv. 508; Cens. Lit., ii. 190:) Sir M. M. Sykes, Pt. 3, 261, £19 8*s.* 6*d.*; Lloyd, 1144, £24 3*s.*; Roxburghe, 3263, £32 11*s.* An edition of less value was pub. 1736, 12mo, (and Skelton's Poems will be found in Chalmers's British Poets, vol. ii.;) but the only good edition, which includes many hitherto unpublished, now first collected, was published, with Notes and some Account of the Author and his Writings, by Rev. Alexander Dyce, in 1843, 2 vols. 8vo; 25 copies on thick paper; with alterations, &c., Bost., 1856, 3 vols. 16mo. See reviews of this edition in Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxiii. 510; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1843, 805; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1844, ii. 227.

"By the Rev. Alexander Dyce, who has performed his difficult task in a manner to leave little or nothing further to be desired."—G. L. CRAIK, LL.D.: Comp. Hist. of Eng. Lit., 1863.

The vigour of this poet is well expressed in Bishop Hall's line—

"Angry Skelton's breathlesse rhymes."—(Virgidemiarum, lib. iv.:)

his coarseness is rebuked by Pope in the familiar couplet,

"Chaucer's worst ribaldry is learned by rote,
And beastly Skelton Heads of Houses quote."
Imit. of Horace, B. II., Epist. I.;

and to Cleland he declared,

"Skelton's poems are all low and bad; there's nothing in them that's worth reading."—Spence's Anec., sect. iv. 1734–36.

We give some other opinions:

"Being indeed but a rude rayling rimer, and all his doings ridiculous: he used both short distances and short measures, pleasing only the popular eare."—PUTTENHAM: Arte of Eng. Poet., lib. ii. ch. ix. 69, 1589.

"Skelton applied his wit to skurrilities and ridiculous matters: such among the Greeks were called pantomimi, with us buffoons."—MERES: Palladis Tamia, 1598.

"Methinks he hath a miserable loose rambling style."—EDWARD PHILLIPS: Theat. Poet. Anglic., 1675.

"Tho' his stile is rambling and loose, yet he was not without invention, and his satire is strongly pointed."—CIBBER: Lives of the Poets, i. 27, 1753.

"It is in vain to apologize for the coarseness, obscenity, and scurrility of Skelton by saying that his poetry is tinctured with the manners of his age. Skelton would have been a writer without decorum at any period. . . . Skelton's characteristic vein of humour is capricious and grotesque. If his whimsical extravagancies ever move our laughter, at the same time they shock our sensibility. His festive levities are not only vulgar and indelicate, but frequently want truth and propriety. His subjects are often as ridiculous as his metre; but he sometimes debases his matter by his versification. On the whole, his genius seems better suited to low burlesque than to liberal and manly satire. It is supposed by Caxton [Preface to Æneid] that he improved our language; but he sometimes affects obscurity, and sometimes adopts the most familiar phraseology of the common people."—WARTON: Hist. of Eng. Poet., ed. 1840, ii. 494. And see Index, and Warton's Spenser, ii. 107.

"There is certainly a vehemence and vivacity in Skelton which was worthy of being guided by a better taste; and the objects of his satire bespeak some degree of public spirit. But his eccentricity in attempts at humour is at once vulgar and flippant, and his style is almost a texture of slang phrases, patched with shreds of French and Latin."—CAMPBELL: Specimens of Eng. Poet., i. 101–3.

"Skelton is certainly not a poet, unless some degree of comic humour, and a torrent-like volubility of words in doggrel rhyme, can make one; but this uncommon fertility, in a language so little copious as ours was at this time, bespeaks a mind of some original vigour. Few English writers come nearer in this respect to Rabelais, whom Skelton preceded. His attempts in serious poetry are utterly contemptible; but the satirical lines on Cardinal Wolsey were probably not ineffective. It is impossible to determine whether they were written before 1520. Though these are better known than any poem of Skelton's, his dirge on Philip Sparrow is the most comic and imaginative."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, i. 313. See, also, 423, 438.

"The power, the strangeness, the volubility of his language, the audacity of his satire, and the perfect originality of his manner, made Skelton one of the most extraordinary writers of any age or country."—SOUTHEY.

"This singular writer has suffered the mischance of being too original for some of his critics: they looked on the surface, and did not always suspect the depths they glided over: the legitimate taste of others has revolted against the mixture of the ludicrous and the invective."—ISAAC DISRAELI: Amenities of Lit.: Skelton, (q. v.)

"With strong sense, a vein of humour, and some imagination, he had a wonderful command of the English language. His rhymes are interminable, and often spun out beyond the sense, in the wantonness of power. In judging of this old poet, we must always recollect the state of poetry in his time, and the taste of the age, which being taken into the account, we cannot help considering Skelton as an ornament of his own time, and a benefactor to those which came after him."—Retrospec. Rev., vi., 1822, 337–53, (q. v.)

"Rutebeuf reads to me like our Skelton: he has the same flowing rapid doggrel, the same satiric verse, with not much of poetry; but both are always alive."—H. H. MILMAN: Hist. of Lat. Chris., vol. vi. b. xi. ch. ii., n.

Skelton, Philip, b. near Lisburn, Ireland, 1707, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin; became Curate of Monaghan, 1732; obtained the living of Pettigo, 1750; was preferred to Devenish, 1759; Rector of Fintona, 1766; d. 1787. He was a learned and excellent man, and an eloquent preacher. He pub. A Vindication of the Bishop of Winchester, 1736; Some Proposals for the Revival of Christianity, (ascribed to Swift,) in the same year; The Necessity of Tillage and Granaries, in 1741; a paper on the Cornel Caterpillar, in Phil. Trans., in 1748; and The Consultation, (against the Arians,) in 1753. His Ophiomaches, or Deism Revealed, was pub., (anon.,) Lon., 1749, 2 vols. 8vo; 2d ed., 1751, 2 vols. 12mo; a collection of his Discourses appeared in 1754, (some 1755,) 2 vols. 8vo; and of his Complete Works, Dubl., 1770–86, 7 vols. 8vo; his Select Sermons, &c., ed. by S. Clapham, were pub. Lon., 1808, 8vo; and his Complete Works, with Life by Samuel Burdy, and ed. by Rev. Robert Lynam, appeared in 1824, 6 vols. 8vo. The Life, by Burdy, originally pub. Dubl., 1792, 8vo, (repub. in a vol. of Miscellaneous Lives, by Alexander Chalmers, in 1817,) elicited Observations, 1794, 12mo, which were answered in A Vindication, 1795, 12mo. His sermons are warmly commended by John Wesley and others, and also by Clapham in sufficiently exalted strains:

"In his reasoning he is as clear as Sherlock, in his warnings as solemn as Secker, in his piety as engaging as Porteus, and in his exhortations as vehement as Demosthenes."

Skinner, Stephen, M.D., b. in London, 1623, and educated at Christ Church, Oxford; after pursuing his studies on the Continent, settled at Lincoln, where he cultivated medicine and philology with great success until his death, in 1667. He had long been engaged in the preparation of an etymological dictionary of the English language, and left MSS. on the subject, thus catalogued by Wood: 1. Prolegomena Etymologica, with a large preface. 2. Etymologicon Linguæ Anglicanæ. 3. Etym. Botanicum. 4. Etymological Expositio Vocum Forensium. 5. Etymol. Vocum Omnium Anglicarum. 6. Etym. Onomasticon, &c. Fortunately, these MSS. fell into the hands of Thomas Henshaw, who moulded them into shape, added many words and explanatory notes, (all signed H.,) and a prefatory epistle, and pub. the whole, with the following title: Etymologicon Linguæ Anglicanæ, seu Explicatio Vocum Anglicarum Etymologica, ex propriis Fontibus, scil. ex Linguis duodecim; Anglo-Saxonica, Runica, Gothica, Cimbrica, Franco-Theotisca, Danica, Belgica, Teutonica, Cambro-Britannica, Franco-Gallica, Italica, Hispanica, Latina-Græca, Londini, 1671, fol.; some l. p. See Kersey, John.

"Skinner's Lexicon Etymologicon is an excellent one of that kind for the English language."—Locke.

"It is to be regarded rather as containing anecdotes of the language than as a systematic body of English etymologies; but it contains numerous valuable suggestions."—Rose's Biog. Dict., xii., 1848, 48.

"For the Teutonick etymologies I am commonly indebted to Junius and Skinner."—Dr. Johnson: Pref. to his Dict. of the Eng. Lang., 1755, 2 vols. fol.

The author of the Preface to the reprint of Johnson's Dictionary Verbatim from the Author's Last Folio Edition, Lon., 1828 et seq., (vide Johnson, Samuel, LL.D., p. 975, supra,) alleges that Tooke, in his Diversions of Purley, treats Skinner—to whom he is largely indebted—with great unfairness. Notices of Skinner will be found in Wood's Hist. and Antiq. Univ. Oxon., ii. 280, and in his Athen. Oxon., (Bliss's ed.,) iii. 793. See, also, Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxxi. 502, 507.

Sloane, Sir Hans, M.D., b. at Killileagh, county of Down, Ireland, 1660; after studying medicine, chemistry, and botany, in London and on the Continent, in 1678 embarked for Jamaica, where he resided for fifteen months; was Physician to Christ's Hospital, London, 1694–1730; President of the College of Physicians, 1719–33; President of the Royal Society, 1727–40; made Physician-General to the Army, and a baronet, 1716; d. 1752. He left a remarkable collection,—50,000 volumes, 3516 MSS., many specimens in various departments of natural history, &c.,—which he bequeathed to the nation, on condition that £20,000 (less, he declares, than one-fourth of its value) should be paid to his heirs. The terms were accepted; and the treasures thus acquired, and the Harleian MSS., were added to the Cottonian collection, and the whole formed the basis of the British Museum. He was a man of great benevolence, unwearied industry, and zealous in the promotion of useful knowledge. 1. He shows on holidays a sacred pin
That touched the ruff that touched Queen Bess's chin."

Smith, Adam, LL.D., the only child of Adam Smith, Comptroller of the Customs at Kirkaldy, Scotland, and of his wife, Margaret Douglas, daughter of Mr. Douglas, of Strathenry, was b. at Kirkaldy, June 5, 1723, (a few months after the death of his father;) studied at the University of Glasgow, 1737–40, and at Balliol College, Oxford, (as an exhibitioner on Snell's foundation,) 1740–47; read lectures on rhetoric and belles-lettres at Edinburgh, under the patronage of Lord Kames, 1748–51; Professor of Logic in the University of Glasgow, 1751–52, and Professor of Moral Philosophy, 1752–63; travelled on the Continent with the Duke of Buccleuch, March, 1764–October, 1766; lived in retirement at Kirkaldy, engaged on his Wealth of Nations, 1766–76; resided chiefly in London, 1776–78; appointed one of the Commissioners of His Majesty's Customs in Scotland in 1778, and thereupon removed to Edinburgh, where he resided until his death, July, 1790. In 1787 he was elected Rector of the University of Glasgow; and "no preferment," he declares, (in his letter of acceptance to the Principal,) "could have given" him "so much real satisfaction."

He was never married; though—but this interesting part of his history shall be told in the language of his friend and biographer, Dugald Stewart:

"In the early part of Mr. Smith's life, it is well known to his friends that he was for several years attached to a young lady of great beauty and accomplishment. How far his addresses were favourably received, or what the circumstances were which prevented their union, I have not been able to learn; but I believe it is pretty certain that after this disappointment he laid aside all thoughts of marriage. The lady to whom I allude died also unmarried. She survived Dr. Smith for a considerable number of years, and was alive long after the publication [1795] of the first edition of this Memoir. I had the pleasure of seeing her when she was turned of eighty; and she still retained evident traces of her former beauty. The powers of her understanding and the gaiety of her temper seemed to have suffered nothing from the hand of time."—Account of the Life and Writings of Adam Smith, LL.D.

He enjoyed all the comforts of home in the society of his mother, who died in 1784, and of his cousin, Miss Douglas, who followed her in 1788: the loss of their companionship was severely felt, and is supposed to have hastened his own end. His moral character was not only irreproachable, but his benevolence, candour, and gentleness were conspicuous, and no man seems to have been more esteemed and beloved by his friends. Among the most intimate of these was David Hume; and in Smith's Letter to Mr. Strahan on the last illness of David Hume, London, 1777, 8vo, and prefixed to the autobio graphy of the latter, (see HUME, DAVID, p. 914,) evidence was afforded that in the religious opinions of these philosophers there were few points of difference. As Smith had pursued his early studies at Oxford, with a view to the ministry of the Church of England, the skepticism exhibited in this publication excited no little surprise. He was attacked with considerable wit by Bishop Horne, through the medium of an anonymous pamphlet, entitled A Letter to Adam Smith, LL.D., on the Life, Death, and Philosophy of David Hume, Esq.; by one of the People called Christians, Oxford, 1777, 12mo. Dr. Smith's first publication, a critique on Dr. Johnson's Dictionary, in the (old) Edinburgh Review, 1755, has been already noticed by us, (JOHNSON, SAMUEL, p. 975.) Sir James Mackintosh, it will be observed, (see, also, Mackintosh's Miscell. Works, ed. 1854, ii. 467,) does not rate its lexicographical value very high: Lord Brougham, however, (Life of Adam Smith,) calls it "a paper of great merit." Dr. Smith also published in this Review, A Letter to the Editors. We proceed to an enumeration, accompanied with critical notices, of Dr. Smith's subsequent publications:

1. The Theory of Moral Sentiments, &c., Lon., 1759, 8vo. Reviewed in Lon. Month. Rev., July, 1759, 1–18.

"In a word, without any partiality to the author, he is one of the most elegant and agreeable writers upon morals that we are acquainted with."—P. 18.

To the second (1761, 8vo) and all following editions was appended A Dissertation on the Origin of Languages, and on the Different Genius of those which are Original and Compounded. The 6th edition, with Considerable Additions and Corrections, was pub. 1790, 2 vols. 8vo; 7th ed., 1792, 2 vols. 8vo; 8th ed., 1797, 2 vols. 8vo; 9th ed., 1801, 2 vols. 8vo; 10th ed., 1804, 2 vols. 8vo; 11th ed., Edin., 1808, (some 1809,) 2 vols. 8vo; and an edition in 1812, in 1 vol. 8vo. It was repub., Boston, 1817, 8vo; N. York, 1821, (some 1822,) 2 vols. in 1, 8vo. The last edits. in English are those of Griffin, Edin., 1849, '54, p. 8vo, H. G. Bohn, (Stand. Lib., xc.,) Lon., 1853, p. 8vo; the last edit., in French, (traduction de Mme. la Marquise de Condorcet,) revue, annotée et précédée d'une Introduction par M. H. Baudrillart, Paris, 1860, 12mo.

The doctrine of this work is thus summed up by the author:

"When we approve of any character or action, the sentiments which we feel are derived from four different sources. First, we sympathize with the motives of the agent; secondly, we enter into the gratitude of those who receive the benefits of his actions; thirdly, we observe that his conduct has been agreeable to the general rules by which those two sympathies generally act; and, lastly, when we consider such actions as making part of a system of behaviour which tends to promote the happiness either of the individual or of society, they appear to derive a beauty from this utility not unlike that which we ascribe to any well-contrived machine."

The sources of moral approbation he believes to be here all enumerated:

"After deducting," he remarks, "in any particular case, all that must be acknowledged to proceed from some one or other of these four principles, I should be glad to know what remains; and I shall freely allow this overplus to be ascribed to a moral sense, or to any other peculiar faculty, provided anybody will ascertain what this overplus is."

The philosopher's theory is now so generally condemned as unsound that, upon reflection, we have concluded it to be useless to occupy our limited space with the expositions of eminent critics which lie at our elbow. It will be quite sufficient to refer the student of mental philosophy to Dr. Brown's Lectures (Lect. XIII.) on the Philosophy of the Human Mind; Sir J. Mackintosh's Prelim. Dissert. on the Progress of Ethical Philosophy, prefixed to Encyc. Brit., (repub. in his Miscell. Works, vol. i.;) Morell's Hist. of Mod. Philos.; Stewart's Account of Smith; Lord Brougham's Life of Smith, (Lives of Philosophers Time George III.;) C. S. Henry's Epit. of the Hist. of Philos.; Blakey's Hist. of Philos. of Mind; Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist., (Lect. IX.;) Hoffman's Legal Outlines; Memoirs of T. Moore; Sir Wm. Hamilton's Lects. on Metaphysics,) Lects. XXXV., XXXVI.,) 1859; An Essay in Vindication of the Colonies of America from Adam Smith, 1764, 8vo; Recollec. by S. Rogers, 1859; Blackw. Mag., xxvii. 921, xxix. 745, xxx. 93, xxxvii. 699, xlv. 547; Edin. Rev., li. 543; N. Amer. Rev., viii. 371, (by L. Frisbie.)

But, though Dr. Smith's philosophy be unsatisfactory, in his treatment of it he is most agreeable and often peculiarly happy. Professor Smyth considers his work the most delightful of all philosophical books; Dr. Brown styles its "minor details and illustrations" "a model of philosophic beauty;" Lord Brougham calls it "a performance of the highest merit;" and Sir James Mackintosh, whilst finding fault with its "redundancy" and "repetitions," commends its "beauty of diction." The last-named critic also gives Dr. Smith the credit of being "the first who has drawn the attention of philosophers to one of the most curious and important parts of human nature—who has looked closely and steadily into the workings of Sympathy."

Inquiry into the Wealth of Nations, new ed., Nelson, 1868, 8vo, 3*s*. 6*d*.

This great work was soon translated into several languages: in French, avec des Notes et Observations par Germain Garnier, de l'Institut National, Paris, 1802, 5 vols. 8vo; again, 1809, 3 vols. 8vo; last ed., 1859, 3 vols. 8vo.

"The 'Wealth of Nations' gives Adam Smith an undoubted claim to be regarded as the founder of the modern system of political economy, and to be classed amongst the most eminent benefactors of his species. The excellence of this great work is obvious from the fact of its having exercised a more powerful and beneficial influence over the public opinion and legislation of the civilized world, since its appearance, than has ever been exercised by any other publication. It owes this high distinction to a variety of causes, but principally, perhaps, to the general soundness and liberality of its general doctrines; to their bearing upon the most important affairs and interests of nations and individuals; and to the admirable manner in which they are expounded. Nor is it the least of the author's merits that he has pointed out and smoothed the route by following which subsequent philosophers have been able to perfect much that he left incomplete, to rectify the mistakes into which he sometimes fell, and to make many new and important discoveries."—McCulloch's Lit. of Polit. Econ., 1845, 11. See, also, McCulloch's Principles of Political Economy; RICARDO, DAVID, No. 6.

"The great name of Adam Smith rests upon the Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations; perhaps the only book which produced an immediate, general, and irrevocable change in some of the most important parts of the legislation of all civilized states. The works of Grotius, of Locke, and of Montesquieu, which bear a resemblance to it in character and had no inconsiderable analogy to it in the extent of their popular influence, were productive only of a general amendment,—not so conspicuous in particular instances as discoverable, after a time, in the improved condition of human affairs. The work of Smith, as it touched those matters which may be numbered and weighed, bore more visible and palpable fruit. In a few years it began to alter laws and treaties; and has made its way through the convulsions of revolution and conquest to a due ascendant over the minds of men, with far less than the average of those obstructions of prejudice and clamour which ordinarily choke the channel through which truth flows into practice. The most eminent of those who have since cultivated and improved the science will be the foremost to address their immortal master,

"'Tenebris tantis tam clarum extollere lumen
Qui primus potuisti, ILLUSTRANS COMMODA VITÆ
Te sequor!' (Lucret., lib. iii.)"

SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Dissert. on the Progress of Ethical Philos. See, also, his Life of Sir T. More, Works, i. 421, and his articles in Edin. Rev., xx. 347, xxvii. 191.

"The 'Wealth of Nations' combines both the sound and enlightened views which had distinguished the detached pieces of the French and Italian Economists, and, above all, of Mr. Hume, with the great merit of embracing the whole subject, thus bringing the general scope of the principles into view, illustrating all the parts of the inquiry by their combined relations, and confirming their soundness in each instance by their application to the others. The copiousness of the illustrations keeps pace with the closeness of the reasoning; and wherever the received prejudices of lawgivers are to be overcome, or popular errors to be encountered, the arguments and the facts and the explanations are judiciously given with extraordinary fulness; the author wisely disregarding all imputations of prolixity or repetition, in pursuit of the great end of making himself understood and gaining the victory over error. The chapter on the Mercantile System is an example of this; but the errors of that widely-prevailing theory and its deeply-rooted prejudices are also encountered occasionally in almost every other part of the work. It is a lesser, but a very important, merit, that the style of the writing is truly admirable. There is not a book of better English to be anywhere found. The language is simple, clear, often homely like the illustrations, not seldom idiomatic, always perfectly adapted to the subject handled. Besides its other perfections, it is one of the most entertaining of books. There is no laying it down after you begin to read. You are drawn on from page to page by the strong current of the arguments, the manly sense of the remarks, the fulness and force of the illustrations, the thickly-strewed and happily-selected facts. Nor can it ever escape observation that the facts, far from being a mere bede-roll of details unconnected with principle and with each other, derive all their interest from forming parts of a whole, and reflecting the general views which they are intended to exemplify or to support."—LORD BROUGHAM: Lives of Philos. Time of Geo. III., ed. 1855, 263–64. See, also, 468–72, his Men of Letters, ed. 1855, 241, n., his Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1856, iii. 3–29, and his Polit. Philos., Pt. 1, Introduction.

"The great and leading object of his speculations is, to illustrate the provisions made by nature in the principles of the human mind, and in the circumstances of man's external situation, for a gradual and progressive augmentation in the means of national wealth; and to demonstrate that the most effectual plan for advancing a people to greatness, is to maintain that order of things which nature has pointed out; by allowing every man, as long as he observes the rules of justice, to pursue his own interest in his own way, and to bring both his industry and his capital into the freest competition with those of his fellow-citizens. Every system of policy which endeavours, either by extraordinary encouragements to draw towards a particular species of industry a greater share of the capital of the society than what would naturally go to it, or by extraordinary restraints to force from a particular species of industry some share of the capital which would otherwise be employed in it, is, in reality, subversive of the great purpose which it means to promote."—DUGALD STEWART: Account of the Life and Writings of Adam Smith, LL.D.

"Few, I believe, have studied Mr. Smith's works, (particularly his 'Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations,') without regretting, on some occasions, the omissions of his authorities, and, on others, the digressions into which he has been led by conforming so scrupulously to the example of antiquity."—DUGALD STEWART: Account of the Life and Writings of Dr. William Robertson.

Other defects besides the omission of authorities have been complained of:

"The great defect of Adam Smith, and of our economists in general, is the want of definitions."—ARCHBISHOP WHATELY: Elements of Logic.

"It is only a promiscuous assemblage of the soundest principles of political economy, supported by the clearest illustrations and ingenious statistical speculations, blended with instructive reflections; it is not a complete treatise on either science, but an ill-digested mass of enlightened views and accurate information."—J. B. SAY: Polit. Econ.

Yet Professor Smyth thinks that studious application only is necessary to a sufficient comprehension of the work:

"The great work of Adam Smith is not an elementary book,—very far from it; and your best chance of understanding it is to read of each chapter as much as you can, then go to the next chapter, and so on; and, when you have got to the end of the book, begin the book again; and you will at length comprehend the whole sufficiently for any general purpose. I have lately seen a treatise by Mr. Boileau, which I hoped I might recommend to you on this occasion; but I do not think it will be found either more simple or more intelligible than Adam Smith's original work, from which it is avowedly borrowed."—Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lect. XXX. See, also, Lects. III. and XXVI.; and his Lects. on the French Revolution.

For an elementary book, Professor Smyth recommends the Conversations on Political Economy: see MARCET, MRS. JANE, No. 3.

"It is not less agreeable in form than it is valuable in substance; and, instead of being—as is supposed by some who have not read it—dry and repulsive, is undoubtedly, to every reader of mature taste and liberal accomplishments, one of the most interesting as well as instructive books which he can take up."—ALEXANDER H. EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1831, 216. See, also, 218, 222, 223, 225, 229, 231, 232.

"The great text-book of political economy, The Wealth of Nations. In every page of that book its readers found themselves presented with the evidence of the superior advantages of commerce over trade, and of the absolute necessity of commerce at home if they would have it abroad. . . . In every page of that great work they found evidence that if they would prosper they could do so on one condition only,—that condition which requires that the consumer and the producer take their places by each other's side, and thus approximate as nearly as possible the prices of raw materials and manufactured commodities. . . . Dr. Smith was not always right, but he was very generally so. Modern political economy, as has before been said, has very generally rejected him when he was right, or has so used him as to cause him to stand responsible for the correctness of views that, had he been alive, he would indignantly have denounced as utterly erroneous."—HENRY C. CAREY: Principles of Social Science, ii. 1858, 108, 109, 127, n.; and see Index, vol. iii.

"When Adam Smith first stated the truth that one nation does not gain by the poverty of another, but that all are gainers by the prosperity of all, no one suspected that a sagacious despot of great power [Napoleon III.] would on this very year pronounce the great truth on his imperial throne to the assembled deputies of his nation."—DR. "Whose policy has ruled the commercial system of England for twenty years, and, by the false application of just abstract principles, altered the destinies of the state? Adam Smith."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Essays, 1850, ii. 425, (from Blackw. Mag., Jan. 1842.)

From some modern statesmen and publicists Adam Smith and his department of political science have met with little respect. Charles James Fox, remarks Mr. Rogers,

"Treated Political Economy lightly. Said France had drawn her political knowledge from England. 'We knew nothing on that subject till Adam Smith wrote,' said Lord Lauderdale. 'Poh,' says FOX, 'your Adam Smiths are nothing: But that is his Love,' says Fox, speaking of Lauderdale; 'we must spare him there.' 'I think,' says Lauderdale, 'it is every thing.' 'That,' says Fox, 'is a great proof of your affection.'"—Recollec. by Saml. Rogers, (Charles James Fox,) 1859, 14.

This conversation occurred in 1796: it was eight years after this when his lordship published his work on Public Wealth, (see LAUDERDALE, p. 1064, supra.) John Horne Tooke, Mr. Rogers tells us, when commending Hume's style, ranked

"his pupil Smith far, very far, below him:—his Theory of Moral Sentiments nonsense,—his Wealth of Nations full of important facts, but written with a wicked spirit."—Ubi supra, 136.

"It is not the habit of my mind to despise nor to undervalue the sort of knowledge which I do not possess; but I know enough of political economy to have perceived in the father of the British school (Adam Smith) that the wealth of nations is every thing in that school, and the morality and happiness of nations nothing; and in the other writers which have fallen in my way, I have found their knowledge so little, and their presumption so great, as to excite in me a greater degree of contempt than I usually feel for any thing in the shape of a book."—ROBERT SOUTHEY: Letter to Henry Taylor, April 12, 1827: Life and Corresp. of R. Southey, ch. xxx.

"Adam Smith contributed more, by the publication of this single work, toward the happiness of man, than has been effected by the united abilities of all the statesmen and legislators of whom history has preserved an authentic account."—BUCKLE: Hist. of Civil. in Eng., 1857–61. 2 vols. 8vo.

"For my part, though I like the investigation of particular questions, I give up what is called the 'science of political economy.' There is no such science. There are no rules on these subjects so fixed and invariable as that their aggregate constitutes a science. I believe I have recently ran over twenty volumes, from Adam Smith to Professor Dew, of Virginia, and from the whole, if I were to pick out with one hand all the mere truisms, and with the other all the doubtful propositions, little would be left."—DANIEL WEBSTER: Letter to Mr. Dutton, May 9, 1830: Private Corresp. of D. Webster, 1857, i. 501.

Nor should the political economist neglect M. F. Du Cellier's Classes laborieuses en France, Paris, 1859, 8vo.

After Smith's death appeared: 3. Essays on Philosophical Subjects; to which is prefixed an Account of the Life and Writings of the Author, by Dugald Stewart, (originally read before the Roy. Soc. of Edin. in 1793.) Lon., 1795, 4to; Basil, 1799, 8vo; Lon., 1804, 8vo. See Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 4to, 32, 69, 70; W. A. Butler's Lects. on Anc. Philos., i. 39, ii. 210; Sir Wm. Hamilton's Lects. on Metaphysics, Lects. XXVII., XXVIII.; Blackw. Mag., xl. 527.

Among these Essays is a fragment on the History of Ancient Astronomy: Sir George Cornewall Lewis, (p. 1090, supra,) who d. 1863, published in 1862, 8vo, A Historical Survey of the Astronomy of the Ancients. See Edin. Rev., July, 1862. 4. The Works Complete [i.e. Nos. 1, 2, and 3, supra] of Adam Smith; with Life, by Dugald Stewart, (q. v., Nos. 4, 5,) Edin., 1811–12, 5 vols. 8vo.

Stewart's Account of Smith (on which see criticisms in Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 4to, 32, and Lon. Gent. Mag., 1843, ii. 14, n.) has been often republished, (prefixed to Nos. 1 and 2:) its last appearance was in vol. x. (1858) of the Collected Works of Dugald Stewart, Esq., F.R.SS., &c.; edited by Sir William Hamilton, Bart., &c. &c., Edin. and Lon., (see Lon. Gent. Mag., 1858, i. 407.) But we must not omit to refer to the graphic sketch of Smith in the Autobiography of the Rev. Dr. Alexander Carlyle, Edin., 1860, 8vo, and Bost., 1861, 12mo. Among the intended works of Smith never completed was a large Treatise on Law and Government, originally announced in the preface to the first edition (1759) of his Theory of Moral Sentiments, and still promised in a late edition of that work:

"Thirty years ago," he remarks, "I entertained no doubt of being able to execute every thing which it announced."

What an affecting record would that be which should chronicle The Uncompleted Projects of Great Minds! (See BAKER, THOMAS; COLE, WILLIAM.)

But Smith accomplished much; and, however indifferent our reader may be to his political or his moral philosophy, he will find enough in the literary treatment of these themes to reward him for a careful perusal of The Wealth of Nations, The Theory of Moral Sentiments, and the Philosophical Essays.

"Adam Smith was nearly the first who made deeper reasonings and more exact knowledge popular among us."—LORD JEFFREY: Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1853, 77, (quotation continued on p. 977, supra, of this Dictionary: DR. JOHNSON'S STYLE OF COMPOSITION.)

"Among the inferior excellencies of this great philosopher, it is not to be forgotten that in his full and flowing composition he manages the English language with a freer hand and with more native ease than any other Scottish writer. Robertson avoids Scotticisms; but Smith might be taken for an English writer not peculiarly idiomatical."—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Miscell. Works, ed. 1854, ii. 469.

"Locke, [in his Essay on Human Understanding,] Smith, [in his Wealth of Nations,] chose an easy, clear, and free, but somewhat loose and verbose, style,—more concise in Locke, more elegant in Smith,—in both exempt from pedantry, but not void of ambiguity and repetition."—Ibid., i. 309.

"Dr. Smith, the first economical philosopher, and perhaps the most eloquent theoretical moralist, of modern times."—SIR J. MACKINTOSH: Autobiography, in his Life, i. ch. i.

"M. Gasser, an artist of Vienna, has executed a statue of Adam Smith, working from the only two existing portraits of the economist. Some photographs of the model and of the statue, now nearly finished, and a small fac-simile in plaster, have been exhibited for some time past in the reading-room of the Bodleian Library. M. Gasser engages to deliver the finished statue at any British port for the sum of £700. In the belief that the erection of the statue in some one of the buildings belonging to the University would be a fitting tribute to the memory of one among the most illustrious persons who have received their education at Oxford, a committee has been appointed with a view to purchasing the statue and presenting it to the University of Oxford."—March, 1867.

Smith, Albert, b. at Chertsey, England, May 24, 1816; became a member of the College of Surgeons, 1838, and attracted the attention of his brethren and the public by a series of papers in the Medical Times, entitled Jasper Buddle; or, Confessions of a Dissecting-Room Porter. He also contributed to The Mirror, Bentley's Miscellany, and Punch; wrote dramatic pieces for the Surrey Theatre, The Lyceum, and other stages; and soon found himself committed to a literary career. In 1850 he produced an entertainment called the Overland Mail; and on March 15, 1852, he commenced that exhibition of the Ascent of Mont Blanc which, for a number of years, filled the Egyptian Hall (London) with delighted auditors and spectators. He appeared in this performance for the last time only the Monday evening preceding his death, which occurred on Wednesday morning, May 23, 1860, at Fulham. He was the author of the following works:

1. Wassail-Bowl for Christmas, new ed., Lon., Dec. 1843, cr. 8vo; or with No. 2, 1843, 2 vols. cr. 8vo. 2. Physiology of Evening Parties, 1843, cr. 8vo, (see No. 1;) 1846, 12mo; 1849, fp. 8vo. 3. Smith, Alexander, b. Dec. 31, 1830, at Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, Scotland, whilst acting as a designer of patterns for a lace-factory in Glasgow, (he was originally designed for the ministry,) forwarded the MS. of his Life Drama (subsequently included in No. 1) to the Rev. George Gilfillan, who published some extracts, with laudatory comments, in the Critic (1852) and the Eclectic Review. In 1854 he was appointed Secretary to the University of Edinburgh, (salary £300,) and retained this post until his death, Jan. 5, 1867. In 1857 he was married to Miss Flora MacDonald, of Skye. 1. Smith, Charlotte, 1749–1806, a daughter of Nicholas Turner, of Sussex, and a sister of Mrs. Dorset, (p. 514, supra,) before she was sixteen was so unhappy as to marry Mr. Benjamin Smith, a West India merchant, whose extravagance, improvidence, speculations, and misfortunes involved a wife and twelve children in difficulties which it required the diligent use of the mother's pen to relieve. Her life has been narrated at sufficient length by her sister, Mrs. Dorset, (this account was published, with critical comments, by Sir Walter Scott in his Lives of the Novelists;) and Sir S. E. Brydges in his Censura Literaria (viii. 239 et seq.) and Imaginative Biography, Mrs. Elwood in her Literary Ladies of England, (i. 284–309, ii. 270,) and Julia Kavanagh in her English Women of Letters, 1862, 2 vols. p. 8vo, have told us much more of this once famous lady than the modern reader cares to know. List of her works: 1. Elegiac Sonnets and other Essays, Chichester, 1784, 4to; 2d ed., 1784; vol. ii., 1797, 12mo; new ed. of both, 1800, 2 vols. 12mo. Of these Sonnets—some of which have considerable merit—eleven edits. appeared, and translations were made into French and Italian. 2. Both Cowper and Hayley were "astonished at the rapidity and excellence of Mrs. Smith's compositions" whilst engaged on The Old Manor-House. Professor George Moir considers that "her novels are extremely defective in plot," and betray "marks of haste," (Encyc. Brit., art. Romance;) and Sir Archibald Alison pronounces them "wellnigh unreadable." (Essays, ed. 1850, iii. 529.) Mathias condemns her novels, but allows her "great poetical powers, and a pathos which commands attention." (Pursuits of Lit., Dial. I., Note 26.)

Sir Walter Scott, whose heart sometimes got the better of his head and softened the critic into the eulogist, amiably—perhaps justly—remarks,

"While we allow high praise to the sweet and sad effusions of Mrs. Smith's muse, we cannot admit that by these alone she could ever have risen to the height of eminence which we are disposed to claim for her as authoress of her prose narratives. The elegance, the polish, the taste, and the feeling of this highly-gifted lady may no doubt be traced in Mrs. Charlotte Smith's poetry. But for her invention, that highest property of genius, her knowledge of the human bosom, her power of natural description, her wit and her satire, the reader must seek in her prose narratives."—Lives of the Novelists.

"Some of her novels will last, and her sonnets with them, each perhaps aided by the other. There is nothing great in her; but she is natural and touching, and has hit, in the music of her sorrows, upon some of those chords which have been awakened equally, though not so well, in all human bosoms."—LEIGH HUNT: Men, Women, and Books: Spec. of Brit. Poet., No. II.

Smith, Christopher Webb, b. 1793, and educated at Haileybury College, proceeded to India in the Civil Service of the E. I. Co., 1811; and, after holding several important posts, retired on a pension, and has since resided chiefly at Florence.

"He has written, jointly with Sir C. D'Oyly, an elaborate work on the 'Ornithology of Hindostan,' lithographed in India, with illustrations in colours from his own pencil; as also a similar book on 'Indian Sport.' It is understood that he is preparing a work of a like nature on the 'Birds and Flowers of South Africa.' The materials of an elaborate work on the 'Pitti Gallery of Florence,' which cost him eleven years' toil, were lost in the Black Prince steamer."—Men of the Time, Lon., 1868, 739.

"I am a great advocate of culture of every kind, and I say, when I find a man like Professor Goldwin Smith, or Professor Rogers, who, in addition to profound classical learning, have a vast knowledge of modern affairs, and who, as well as scholars, are profound thinkers; these are men whom I know to have a vast superiority over me, and I bow to them with reverence."—RICHARD COBDEN: Speech at Rochdale, Nov. 23, 1864.

Smith, Horace, 1779–1849, and Smith, James, 1775–1839, both natives of London, and the sons of Robert Smith, Solicitor to the Board of Ordnance, varied the active pursuits of business (Horace was a stock-broker, and James his father's partner) by the pleasures of literature. Commencing joint publication by papers in The Pic-Nic, 1802, (a selection from the columns of this journal was published in 1803, 2 vols. 12mo,) they wrote several of the Prefaces to a new edition of Bell's British Theatre, (issued under Cumberland's name;) James inserted an article in the London Review; and both of the brothers contributed from 1807 to 1810 to the Monthly Mirror. It was in this periodical that first appeared the poetical imitations (chiefly from James's pen) entitled Horace in London, which were collected into a 12mo volume in 1813, (4th ed. same year; new ed., 1815;) republished the same year in Boston. Later in life they were both contributors to the New Monthly Magazine (whilst conducted by Campbell, the poet) and to other periodicals. But it was as early as 1812 that they were so fortunate as to adopt an idea of Mr. Ward's, (Secretary to Drury-Lane Theatre,)—the publication of a collection of supposed Rejected Addresses presented for competition at the opening of the house. The volume, a 12mo of 126 pages, (Rejected Addresses; or, The New Theatrum Poetarum,) issued anonymously, met with great success: the public were delighted, the critics applauded, and even the poets (a genus irritabile) pressed into the service commended the felicity of the imitations.

"I think the Rejected Addresses by far the best thing of the kind since The Rolliad," writes Lord Byron (Oct. 19, 1812) to John Murray. "Tell the author I forgive him were he twenty times over our satirist, and think his imitations not at all inferior to the famous ones of Hawkins Browne."

See, also, Lon. Gent. Mag., 1834, i. 585.

And yet Murray had refused to buy the copyright for £20! He became its possessor in 1819, after the publication of the 16th edition, for £131. John Miller published the first edition, 1812, 12mo, at his own risk, keeping half profits and half copyright; and in 1813 he purchased the entire copyright and Horace in London, after the first edition, for £1000. The 22d edition was published in 1851, 12mo, and the 24th in 1854; Railway edition, 1861, 12mo, no plates. The first American edition was published in N. York, 1813, 12mo, and the last in Boston, 1851, 16mo. A copy of the Rejected Addresses, illustrated by 600 engravings, and extended to four volumes, was sold in the city of New York in 1869 for $365. The volume was immediately chronicled in the Edinburgh Review, (Nov. 1812, 434–51,) by Lord Jeffrey; and when his lordship, in 1843, republished this critique in a collection of his Contributions to the Edinburgh Review, he remarked, in a note,

"I take them, [the Rejected Addresses,] indeed, to be the very best imitations (and often of difficult originals) that ever were made, and, considering their great extent and variety, to indicate a talent to which I do not know where to look for a parallel."—Edit. 1853, 944.

The volume was also reviewed (together with the collection of forty-three genuine Rejected Addresses, 1812, 12mo) in the Quarterly Review, (Sept. 1812, 172–81,) and pronounced to be "executed with great humour, discrimination, and good taste." (p. 177.)

For other notices of the Addresses, see Allan Cunningham's Biog. and Crit. Hist.; Moir's Poet. Lit.; Fraser's Mag., viii. 36; Knickerbocker, xi. 139, 272; Analec. Mag., i. 167, ii. 127.

We should not omit to state that the imitations of Wordsworth, (Baby's Debut,) Cobbett, (Hampshire Farmer's Address,) Southey, (The Rebuilding,) Coleridge (Play-House Musings,) and Crabbe, (The Theatre,) the first stanza of Cui Bono? (Lord Byron,) the songs entitled Drury-Lane Hustings and Theatrical Alarm-Bell, (an imitation of the editor of the Morning Post,) and the travesties on Macbeth, George Barnwell, and The Stranger, are by James Smith. The rest of the imitations are by Horace. Some of the Addresses have been recently republished in Parton's Humorous Poetry of the English Language. See, also, notice of Smiths' Poetical Works, infra.

To the Rejected Addresses add Imitations of Celebrated Authors; or, Imaginary Rejected Articles in Prose, by Lamb, James and Horace Smith, Prof. Wilson, Hazlitt, Leigh Hunt, &c., Lon., 1826, 12mo; 4th ed., 1844, p. 8vo.

The last article corrected by him for the press appears to be the paper entitled Posthumous Memoir of Myself, published immediately after his death in the New Monthly Magazine, 1849, (repub. in Bost. Liv. Age, xxiv. 72.) His name also appears among the writers of The Pic-Nic Papers, edited by Charles Dickens, Lon., 1857, p. 8vo; Phila., Nov. 1859. In 1840 (2d ed., 1841; republished, Phila., 1841, 2 vols. 12mo) he published the Memoirs, Letters, and Comic Miscellanies, in Prose and Verse, of the Late James Smith, 2 vols. p. 8vo, (see Lon. Athen., 1840, 656; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1840, 526;) and in 1842 edited Massaniello, an Historical Romance, by D. Macarthy, 3 vols. p. 8vo, (see Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1842, 631.)

His Poetical Works were first collected in 1846, 2 vols. p. 8vo; and republished in 1851, 2 vols. in 1, p. 8vo. The Poetical Works of Horace and James Smith, edited, with a Biographical Sketch, by Epes Sargent, were published in 1 vol. 8vo, N. York, 1857. Contents: Poems, by Horace Smith; Miscellaneous; Humorous Poems by James Smith; London Lyrics; Miscellaneous; "Rejected Addresses," [by Horace and James Smith, from the 23d London ed.;] Notes to "Rejected Addresses." This, the first collective edition of the works of the brothers, professes to contain the whole of the poems of Horace Smith. Peter Cunningham's Notes add to the value of the volume.

Whilst Horace, as we have seen, persisted in addressing a rather listless public through the medium of the press, the talents of James found a more successful vehicle in the acting of Charles Mathews: for his aid in the entertainments of Country Cousins, Air-Ballooning, Trips to Paris, and Trip to America (he contributed gratuitously to the At Home series) he received no less than £1000. "You are the only man in London," exclaimed Mathews, "who can write what I want,—good nonsense." James was not offended by the compliment, and more than once has been heard to exclaim, when this portion of his literary career was referred to, "A thousand pounds for nonsense!"

The Tin Trumpet; or, Heads and Tales for the Wise and Waggish; to which are added Poetical Selections: by the Late Paul Chatfield, M.D.; Edited by Jefferson Saunders, Esq., Lon., 1836, 2 vols. p. 8vo. Smith, Sir James Edward, M.D., b. at Norwich, Dec. 2, 1759; after studying medicine and botany at Edinburgh, took up his residence in London, where he became acquainted with Sir Joseph Banks; in 1784 purchased, for £1088 5*s.*, (delivered in London,) the books, MSS., and natural history specimens of Linnæus, (now owned by the Linnæan Society;) in 1786–87 travelled on the Continent, graduating M.D. at Leyden; in 1788, with the assistance of Sir J. Banks, Bishop Goodenough, and others, founded the Linnæan Society, of which he was elected the first president; in 1792 was employed to teach botany to Queen Charlotte and the princesses; in 1796 was married to Miss Reeve, and in 1797 removed to Norwich, where, with the exception of an annual two months' visit to London, devoted to lectures on botany at the Royal Institution, he resided until his death; knighted by the Prince Regent, 1814; unsuccessful candidate for the chair of botany at Cambridge, (being objected to as a Unitarian Dissenter,) 1818; d. at his house in Surrey Street, Norwich, March 17, 1828. At the time of his death he was one of the deacons of the religious congregation to which he was attached; and he composed several of the poetical pieces contained in a volume of Hymns of Public Worship, selected for the Use of the Congregation assembling at the Octagon Chapel, Norwich, (1826.) In all the relations of life he was most estimable; and, as a leader in the particular branch of research which he did so much to illustrate and expand,

"it was his constant, earnest desire to banish jealousy and rivalship from the pursuits of science, and to cultivate a union and good understanding between the botanists of all nations. . . . He found the science of botany, when he approached it, locked up in a dead language; he set it free, by transfusing into it his own. He found it a severe study, fitted only for the recluse; he left it of easy acquisition to all. In the hands of his predecessors, with the exception of his immortal master, it was dry, technical, and scholastic; in his, it was adorned with grace and elegance, and might attract the poet as well as the philosopher."—*Life of Sir J. Smith, or Smyth, Captain John, b. at Willoughby, Lincolnshire, 1579, d. in London, 1631, a descendant of the Smyths of Cuerdley, has for nearly three centuries maintained the unparalleled honour of being the most distinguished member of the most numerous family (patronymically speaking) of all the tribes of men. Silver-Tongue Henry had more eloquence, Cambridge John more divinity, Greek Thomas more learning, Adam and James Edward more science, and Sydney more wit; but neither of these, nor all of these, enjoy the renown which attaches to the traveller, soldier, sailor, legislator, and ruler, who was equally at home in Turkey and America, alike pre-eminent in the palaces of princes and the huts of savages. And, whilst his fame is thus world-wide, to the grateful veneration of the children of the New World he has a peculiar claim: in the words of an eloquent American biographer,

"Wherever upon this continent the English language is spoken, his deeds should be recounted and his memory hallowed. His services should not only be not forgotten, but should be 'freshly remembered.' His name should not only be honored by the silent canvas and the cold marble, but his praises should dwell living upon the lips of men, and should be handed down by fathers to their children. Poetry has imagined nothing more stirring and romantic than his life and adventures, and History upon her ample page has recorded few more honorable and spotless names."—GEORGE S. HILLARD: Life of Captain John Smith, in Sparks's Amer. Biog., ii. 171–307.

To this volume, the authorities cited below, and Smith's own graphic narrations, we must refer the reader for the details of his "stirring and romantic life and adventures," whilst we proceed to notice him in a capacity not included in the roll of titles of honour which we have already rehearsed.

1. A copy of the edit. of 1626 and one of the edit. of 1632 are in the library of Harvard College; and a copy of the edit. of 1627 is in the library of the Mass. Hist. Soc. A large part of the Generall Historie appeared in Purchas's Pilgrimes, vol. iv., 1625; and the whole will be found in Pinkerton's Collection, vol. xiii., 1813. It was republished, together with his True Travels, (No. 8, infra,) in 2 vols. 8vo, Richmond, Va., in 1819. Of the Sixe Bookes into which the Generall Historie is divided, Smith wrote the whole of Books II. and IV. The other Books, narratives of his friends and companions, are edited by Smith. The Rev. William Simons, compiler of the Proceedings annexed to A Map of Virginia, (No. 2, supra,) "extracted from the authors following"—Book III.—the history of the colony at Jamestown during Smith's residence there. "His [Smith's] style is simple and concise, his narratives bear the stamp of truth, and his descriptions are free from false ornament."—DE TOCQUEVILLE: Democ. in America, Reeves's trans., Lon., 1835, i. 274.

Another word on this book and its chief hero. One of Smith's latest commentators, Mr. Charles Deane, in his Notes on Wingfield's tract "A Discourse of Virginia," (Boston, 1859, sm. fol., p. p.,) remarks that the "current story" of Smith's rescue by Pocahontas "first appears in the Generall Historie," (p. 31;) and he then proceeds to argue against the probability of the oft-told tale. See, also, to the same effect, N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1867, (by H. B. Adams.) Something on the other side, illustrative also of other points in a most interesting history, will be found in a paper on The Marriage of Pocahontas, by Wyndham Robertson, read before the Virginia Historical and Philosophical Society, and published in The Historical Magazine, (N. York,) Oct. 1860, 289–96. Mr. H. B. Grigsby, of Norfolk, also holds fast to the old Virginia faith on this theme. See, also, Pocahontas and her Companions, by Rev. E. D. Neill, Albany, 1869, pp. 32. There has recently appeared, Pocahontas; or, The Founding of Virginia; a Poem, in Three Cantos, by Rev. O. P. Hiller, 1866. 6. An Accidence; or, The Pathway to Experience, necessary for all Young Seamen, &c., Lon., 1626, 4to. 7. "I made acquaintance with brave Captain Smith as a boy in my grandfather's library at home, where I remember how I would sit at the good old man's knees, with my favourite volume on my own, spelling out the exploits of our Virginian hero. I loved to read of Smith's travels, sufferings, captivities, escapes, not only in America, but Europe."—Henry Warrington, in Thackeray's Virginians, vol. ii. ch. xxxii.: Pocahontas.

There is a copy in the library of Harvard University; and the work is reprinted in Collec. Mass. Hist. Soc., 3d Ser., vol. iii. New ed., Bost., 1865, pp. viii., 72, 4to, 250 copies, and some copies l. p.

In this work Smith refers to a History of the Sea, on which he was then engaged: it was probably never completed. Watt (Bibl. Brit.) ascribes two works to him—I. The Innocent cleared, or a Vindication of Captaine John Smith, 1648, 4to; II. England's Improvement Revived, 1670, '73, 4to—which are not from his pen. We shall restore them to their lawful owners when these shall be reached,—if we ever get that far down in this multitudinous name. It is to be regretted that the Latin life of Smith by Henry Wharton, (1664–1694–5,) supra, has not been published: it is, however, a satisfaction to know that it was put into requisition by Mr. Hillard (see his Preface) when compiling his biographical sketch of the bold "Captaine: sometime Governour of Virginia and Admirall of New England." of the Smiths, s. a., broadside, (in the Grenville Collection.)

There are recent Lives of Captain Smith, by W. G. Simms, N. York, 1846, 12mo; by the Author of Uncle Philip's Conversations, N. York, 18mo; and by George Canning Hill, Bost., 1858, 18mo: see, also, ROBINSON, MRS. EDWARD, No. 8. Nor must we omit to notice a recent publication—Letter of John Smith to Lord Bacon, 1618—in the Hist. Mag., (N. York,) 1861, 193–196: see, also, 310. "His body was deposited in Sepulchre's Church choir, on the south side thereof," with a rather florid epitaph, of which the following are the first and last lines:

"Here lies one conquer'd that hath conquer'd kings!
Oh, may his soul in sweet Elysium sleep!"

The verses, some by men of mark, which accompany his Generall Historie and others of his works, are highly eulogistic of his private character and public deeds.

Edward Robinson addresses him as

"Thou that to passe the world's four parts dost deeme
No more than 'twere to go to bed or drinke;"

and Thomas Carlton relieves us of the fear that he was wont, soldier and sailor like, to "drinke" too easily, by the assertion,

"I never knew a Warryer yet, but thee,
From wine, tobacco, debts, dice, oaths, so free."

Smith, John, the most eminent divine of both his names, and generally known to scholars as "John Smith of Cambridge," was b. at Achurch, near Oundle, Northamptonshire, 1618; entered at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, 1636; Fellow of Queen's College, 1644; became a tutor and read a mathematical lecture for some years in the public schools; d. August 7, 1652. In the sermon at his funeral by a distinguished Fellow of Queen's College, (see PATRICK, SYMON, D.D., No. 1,) he is represented as "a man of great abilities, vast learning, and possessing also every grace and virtue which can improve and adorn human nature." He published nothing; but after his death appeared his famous (9) Select Discourses; with his Life, Death, and Funeral Sermon, by Symon Patrick, (and Preface by John Worthington, D.D.,) Lon., 1660, 4to; 2d ed., Camb., 1673, 4to; 3d ed., (reprinted at the suggestion of Bishop Jebb,) with his Life, by Sir David Dalrymple, Lord Hailes, Lon., 1821, 8vo; 4th ed., with Patrick's Sermon, corrected and revised by Henry Griffin Williams, Camb., 1859, 8vo. Lord Hailes published an edition in 1756, Edin., 12mo, in which the Discourse of Prophecy, (reprinted in Bishop Watson's Tracts, vol. iv., 1785, and also translated by Le Clerc into Latin and prefixed to his Commentary on the Prophets,) and that on the opinion of Aristotle on the Immortality of the Soul, are omitted. The quotations are translated. Another abridgment, with a Brief Memoir of the author by the Rev. John King, was pub. Lon., 1820, 12mo. The Discourse on The Excellency and Nobleness of True Religion, omitting the quotations from the Greeks, Romans, and Rabbis, was repub. in 1864.

"The Discourses are all of them very valuable, but this [Of Prophecy] is particularly so."—BISHOP WATSON.

"The profoundly pious and learned John Smith."—BISHOP JEBB.

"All is learned, ingenious, and eminently pious."—ALEX. KNOX.

"I never got so much good among all my books by a whole day's plodding in a study, as by an hour's discourse I have got with him. For he was not a library locked up, nor a book clasped, but stood open for any to converse withal that had a mind to learn. Yea, he was a fountain running over, labouring to do good to those who perhaps had no mind to receive it. None more free and communicative than he was to such as desired to discourse with him; nor would he grudge to be taken off from his studies upon such an occasion. It may be truly said of him, that a man might always come better from him; and his mouth could drop sentences as easily as an ordinary man's could speake sense."—BISHOP PATRICK: Funeral Sermon on John Smith.

"A writer of great erudition and strength of mind."—SOUTHEY.

"Not the least star in the constellation of Cambridge men, the contemporaries of Taylor, &c."—COLERIDGE.

Smith, Joseph, b. at Sharon, Vermont, 1805, murdered at Carthage, Illinois, 1844, widely known as the founder of the Mormons, but noticed here only as a literary impostor, published, as a divine revelation, a corrupt version of a religious romance (The Manuscript Found) written in 1809 by Solomon Spaulding, a Presbyterian preacher, and left in MS. by him. Under Smith's auspices this was given to the world as The Book of Mormon: an Account written by the Hand of Mormon, upon Plates taken from the Plates of Nephi; by Joseph Smith, Jr., Author and Proprietor, Palmyra, 1830, 12mo. Smith professes to have translated this English version from the original Plates of Nephi, (discovered to him by the ministry of angels,) Oliver Cowdery acting as his scribe. The Third American Edition of the Book of Mormon was pub. at Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1841, (repub. 1841 in London in English, Danish, French, German, Italian, and Welsh, each 12mo:) again, New York, Nov. 1858, 12mo. The "late revelations" will be found in a vol. entitled Doctrines and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, selected from the Revelations of God, by Joseph Smith, President, of which many editions have been published: new edit., in English, Danish, and Welsh, each 12mo, Lon., 1845. Ample accounts of Smith and his disciples will be found in The History of the Saints, by J. C. Bennett, Bost., 1842, 12mo; The Mormons, by T. L. "He ran through the Greek and Latin fathers, and judiciously noted them in the margin as he went. . . . So conversant he was and expert in the Chaldaic, Syriac, and Arabic, that he made them as familiar to him, almost, as his own native tongue. Hebrew also he had at his fingers' ends: . . . he had this eulogy given him by a learned bishop of this kingdom, that 'he was a very walking library.'"—WOOD: Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., ii 359, (q. v.)

"He never sought any preferment he had; and was wont merily to say of himself, that he was 'nullus rei prætercquam librorum avarus,' (covetous of nothing but books.) King James preferred him Bishop of Gloucester, 1612, wherein he behaved himself with such meekness, that in all matters of doubt the bias of his inclination did still hang πρὸς τὸ φιλάνθρωπον."—FULLER: Worthies, ed. 1840, ii. 75.

Smith, Richard Penn, 1799–1854, a native of Philadelphia, the son of William Moore Smith, and grandson of William Smith, D.D., first Provost of the College of Philadelphia, was admitted to the Bar, 1821; editor and proprietor of The Aurora, 1822–27; published The Forsaken, a Novel, in 2 vols., in 1831; A Guide to Philadelphia, about 1832; The Actress of Padua, and other Tales, in 2 vols., in 1836; and a Life of David Crockett, (repub. in London,) in the same year. He was also the author of several poems and of many plays, fifteen of which were produced on the Philadelphia stage, in most instances with success. Of these we notice the tragedy of Caius Marius, written for Edwin Forrest and acted by him in 1831; and the following comedies and farces: I. Quite Correct: II. Eighth of January; III. The Disowned; IV. The Deformed; V. A Wife at a Venture; VI. The Sentinels; VII. William Penn; VIII. The Triumph at Plattsburg; IX. The Water Watch; X. Is She a Brigand? XI. My Uncle's Wedding; XII. The Daughter; XIII. The Actress of Padua. Nos. III. and IV. were received with favour on the London boards. The Venetian, a tragedy in five acts, was a later production of Mr. Smith's pen. A selection of his Miscellaneous Works, collected by his son, Horace W. Smith, and preceded by a biographical sketch by Morton McMichael, was pub. in 1 vol. 12mo, pp. 326, Phila., 1856. Smith, Robert Payne, D.D., b. Nov. 1818, was educated at Pembroke College, Oxford, where he graduated with second-class honours in 1841, obtaining also the Boden (Sanscrit) and the Pusey and Ellerton (Hebrew) University Scholarships; Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Oxford, Aug. 1865. 1. S. Cyrilli Alexandriæ Archiepiscopi Commentarii in Lucæ Evangelium quæ supersunt Syriace e Manuscriptis apud Museum Britannicum; Edidit Robertus Payne Smith, Bibliothecæ Bodleianæ Hypo-Bibliothecarius, Oxon., Univ. Pr., Dec. 1858, 4to; in English, by R. P. Smith, May, 1859, 2 vols. 8vo. 2. The Third Part of the Ecclesiastical History of John, Bishop of Eusebius; now first trans. from the Original Syriac, 1860, 8vo, pp. 508. Dr. Cureton, the finder of the original MS., edited the transcript of it published by the Oxford University in 1853. He designed an English translation, but yielded his claim to Mr. Smith, who has enriched the text by many illustrative notes and supplied connecting links. The author was born in Mesopotamia about A.D. 516, and for thirty years enjoyed the favour of Justinian. Will not Mr. Smith give us more translations from the 600 vols. of the Syrian MSS. in the British Museum? He has his choice among 200 authors. See TATTAM, HENRY.

As Sub-Librarian of the Bodleian Library, (appointed 1857,) Mr. Smith published a Latin Catalogue of the Syriac MSS. in that Library, 4to; and he was in 1865 engaged in preparing for the Delegates of the Oxford Press a Syriac Lexicon based on that of Castelli, but a much fuller work. 3. The Authenticity and Messianic Interpretation of the Prophecies of Isaiah Vindicated in a Course of [nine] Sermons preached before the University of Oxford, Oxf. and Lon., 1862, 8vo. A work of great learning. 4. Prophecy: a Preparation for Christ; Bampton Lect. 1869, Camb. and Lon., 1870, 8vo. The author (a profound Hebraist and Arabic scholar) is to contribute a Commentary on Jeremiah to the extensive work projected by Speaker Denison, (see Lon. Reader, 1863, ii. 574,) and some of the lives to Cassell's Biographical Dictionary, Jan. 1867 et seq., complete 1869, imp. 8vo.

Smith, Rev. Stephen R. See Memoirs of, by T. J. Sawyer, Bost., 1852.

Smith, Sydney, b. at Woodford, Essex, 1771, was educated at Winchester School and at New College, Oxford, where he obtained a Fellowship in 1790; resided for six months at a boarding-school at Mont Villiers, Normandy, and there acquired a familiar knowledge of French; Curate of Nether-Avon, Wiltshire, 1794–96; afterwards became tutor to Mr. Beach, and removed to Edinburgh, where he resided for five years, (acting as minister of Charlotte Episcopal Chapel,) and where he founded the Edinburgh Review, editing the first number, (see JEFFREY, FRANCIS, LORD, pp. 960–961, supra;) in 1804 removed to London, (where about 1800 he had married Miss Pybus,) where he preached at the Foundling Hospital, &c., delivered lectures at the Royal Institution, became greatly distinguished as a wit, and not less famous as a brilliant and most unsparing critic in the Edinburgh Review; Rector of Foston-le-Clay, Yorkshire, 1806; Prebendary of Bristol, 1828; Rector of Combe-Florey, Somersetshire, 1829; Canon Residentiary of St. Paul's Cathedral, 1831; d. at his house in Green Street, Mayfair, London, Feb. 22, 1845, and was buried in the Kensall Green Cemetery.

See Blackw. Mag., xxi. 859, 861; Life of Sir J. Mackintosh, i. ch. viii., ii. ch. ii. These letters perhaps did as much towards promoting Catholic Emancipation as all other publications and speeches together. 5. Sermons, 1809, 2 vols. 8vo. Of these, about ten are republications with alterations; the other forty were here first published. These vols. and No. 2 were censured by J. W. Croker in Lon. Quar. Rev., May, 1809, 387; and the former met with little favour at the hands of John Foster in Eclec. Rev., May and June, 1809, (repub. in Foster's Crit. Essays, i. 285.) The London Monthly Review remarks,

"Mr. Smith possesses a command of words, and he is a spirited and sensible declaimer."

"He is universally admitted to have been a great reasoner, and the greatest master of ridicule that has appeared among us since Swift."—LORD MACAULAY, 1847: Letter to Mrs. Sydney Smith, in Memoirs of Rev. S. Smith.

"I find my father here, and indeed in almost every sketch of him, compared to Swift in the character of his writings. It is for others to decide upon the justness of the comparison; but there is one difference I ought, and am proud, to point out: that there is not a single line in them that might not be placed before the purity of youth, or that is unfit for the eye of a woman; that he has exercised his powers of wit and sarcasm to the utmost, without ever sullying his pages with impurities or degrading his talents and profession by irreligion: and this, I believe, can in very few instances be asserted of any other eminent humorous writer, either French or English, who have used such powers to any great extent. Lord John Russell, in writing of my father, says on this subject, 'Too much indulgence has been shown to the extravagance, dishonesty, and domestic infidelity of men of wit, as if the "light that led astray was light from heaven." It is not light from heaven, but flashes from a volcano which has its seat in hell.' "—LADY HOLLAND: Memoir of Rev. S. Smith.

"If Mr. Sydney Smith had not been the greatest and most brilliant of wits, he would have been the most remarkable man of his time for a sound and vigorous understanding and great reasoning powers; and if he had not been distinguished for these, he would have been the most eminent and the purest writer of English."—SIR HENRY HOLLAND: Memoir, &c.

On this dictum see Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1855.

"The first remark that I made to myself, after listening to Mr. Sydney Smith's conversation, was, that if he had not been known as the wittiest man of his day, he would have been accounted one of the wisest."—EDWARD EVERETT: Memoir, &c.

"Smith's reputation here then [at Edinburgh, 1797–1802] was the same as it has been throughout his life, that of a wise wit. Was there ever more sense combined with more hilarious jocularity?"—LORD COCKBURN: Memorials of his Time, ch. iii.

"He had no philosophic turn, little poetic fancy, and scarce any eloquence, but a prodigious fund of innate sagacity, vast powers of humorous illustration, and a clear perception of the practical bearing of every question. . . . In society he was very much sought after, from the fame of his convivial talents and the real force of his colloquial expressions; but there was a constant straining after effect, and too little interchange of thought to raise his discourse to a very high charm."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Hist. of Europe, 1815–1852, ch. v. See, also, his Essays, 1850, iii. 633.

"His wit and humour were always unpremeditated, and seemed not so much the result of efforts to amuse, as the overflowing of a mind full of imagery, instantly ready to combine with whatever passed in conversation. . . . I thought him the best preacher I ever heard; and I know of no better sermons than those he has published.

"There are passages in them tinged with the wit which made him so delightful a companion out of the pulpit; but this does not in the least impair their seriousness. He seems to me, in these discourses, to be at all times equally earnest, eloquent, and sound in the view he takes of his subject, and the more I read them the more I find them to contain."—C. R. LESLIE: Autobiog. Recollec., 1860, ch. v.

"But Sydney, Sydney is, in his way, inimitable, and, as a conversational wit, beats all the men I have ever met. Curran's fancy went much higher, but also much lower. Sydney, in his gayest flights, though boisterous, is never vulgar."—T. MOORE: Memoirs, &c. of T. Moore, vi. 315. See, also, Index.

Lecture delivered over the Remains of Jeremy Bentham, June 9, 1832, Lon., 8vo. Bentham was not disposed to part with his friend Smith, and the latter complied with the philosopher's rather erratic fancy:

"I became acquainted with Dr. Southwood Smith. On visiting him, we saw an object which I have often heard celebrated, and had thought would be revolting, but found, on the contrary, an agreeable sight; this is the skeleton of Jeremy Bentham. It was at Bentham's request that the skeleton, dressed in the same dress he habitually wore, stuffed out to an exact resemblance of life, and with a portrait-mask in wax,—the best I ever saw' —sits there as assistant to Dr. Smith in the entertainment of his guests, and companion of his studies. The figure leans a little forward, resting the hands on a stout stick which Bentham always carried, and had named 'Dapple.' The attitude is quite easy, the expression on the whole mild, winning, yet highly individual."—Miss S. M. Fuller: quoted by John Neal in Atlantic Mon., Nov. 1865, 581.

If the two friends conversed, we suppose (to borrow an old pun) that it was in one of the "dead" languages. We certainly should have no hesitation in declining such a bequest, coupled with such conditions, even if the testator, legacy, and proposed "companion" were our oldest and dearest friend. 6. Smith, William, LL.D., Ph.D., well known as editor and co-author of the Classical Dictionaries which bear his name, was b. in London in 1814, educated at the University of London, (now University College,) where he gained the first prizes in the Latin and Greek classes, and subsequently kept his terms at Gray's Inn. Fortunately for the cause of classical education, philology proved a stronger attraction than law, and those who had admired the proficiency of the student were gratified by his election to the chair of the Greek, Latin, and German Languages in the Independent Colleges of Highbury and Homerton. When in 1850 these institutions were united with Coward College, and the three were incorporated under the name of New College, London, Dr. Smith was appointed Professor of the Greek and Latin Languages and Literature; in 1853 he became Classical Examiner in the University of London, and in 1867 editor of Murray's Quarterly Review. In our enumeration of his publications it will be observed that we adopt a homogeneal in preference to a chronological arrangement.

See commendatory notices in Lon. Athen., 1852, 49; 1857, 1261; Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1852, 39, 593, 777; N. Amer. Rev., July, 1855, 268; Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1854, art. iv., and Oct. 1856, art. v.

These three Dictionaries (in all, 6 vols. med. 8vo, 1598 wood-cuts and 4 maps, £6 3*s.*) form a complete Encyclopædia of Classical Antiquity,—superseding the time-honoured manuals of Adam, Potter, and Lempriere.

"I have been for some time in the habit of using the Dictionaries of Antiquity and Ancient Biography, as well as the Dictionary of Ancient Geography, and I have no hesitation in saying, from my knowledge of them, that they are far superior to any other publication of the same sort in our language. They are works which every student of literature ought to consult habitually, and which are indispensable to every person engaged in original researches into any department of antiquity."—SIR G. CORNEWALL LEWIS.

"I have had frequent occasion to consult these works, and have derived from them great assistance and instruction."—GEORGE GROTE.

Dr. Vaughan, (Harrow,) Dr. Hawtrey, (Eton,) and Rev. W. H. Thompson (Trin. Coll., Camb.) unite in commendation of these great works.

The articles in the three works were contributed by the following writers, some of whom enjoy a high reputation for classical scholarship: Alexander Allen, C. T. Arnold, J. E. Bode, C. A. Blandis, G. Smith are not in this list,) see London Reader, No. 57, Jan. 20, 1864, 134–6.

"No similar work in our own or in any other language is for a moment to be compared with it. The Christian and the scholar have here a treasure-house on every subject connected with the Bible, full to overflowing, and minute even to the tithing of mint and cummin."—Lon. Quar. Rev., No. CCXXXII., Oct. 1864, art. iv.

"We turn again and again to this Dictionary, with interest, with confidence, with respectful admiration of the labour, the learning, the judgment, the conscientiousness, and the courage it displays."—Edin. Rev., Jan. 1865, art. ii.

Appleton & Co., r. 8vo, in Nos., 1867–68; in 1 vol., Sept. 20, 1868. II. Dictionary of the Bible, by Dr. William Smith; Revised and Edited by Professor H. B. Hackett, D.D., with the Co-operation of Mr. Ezra Abbot, A.M., Hurd & Houghton, 8vo, in Nos., 1867. III. Cyclopædia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Literature; Prepared by the Rev. John McClintock, D.D., and James Strong, S.T.D., Harper & Brothers, 6 vols. r. 8vo, 1867 et seq.

We resume our list: 5. A Concise Dictionary of the Bible; being a Condensation [by William Aldis Wright, M.A., infra] of the larger Dictionary; Edited by Wm. Smith, LL.D., with wood-cuts, Lon., Nov. 1865, med. 8vo, pp. 1050, £1 1*s*. 6. A Smaller Dictionary of the Bible, 1866, cr. 8vo, pp. 600, 7*s*. 6*d*. 7. The Old Testament History; from the Creation to the Return of the Jews from Captivity, Edited, Dec. 1865, p. 8vo, 7*s*. 6*d*.; N. York, 1869, r. 12mo. 8. The New Testament History, with an Introduction, containing the Connection of the Old and New Testament, Lon., Nov. 1866, p. 8vo, 7*s*. 6*d*.; N. York, 1868, r. 12mo.

"To their valuable Student's Histories the Harpers have added 'The New Testament History, with an Introduction, connecting the histories of the Old and New Testaments.' Like very thing edited by Dr. William Smith, it is a model of accuracy, compactness, and completeness. Almost every thing he gives us at once takes place as the best of its class in English." —C. P. Krauth, D.D.

9. A Smaller Edition of the Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, [see No. 1,] for Schools, Lon., 1845, cr. 8vo, with 200 wood-cuts, 10*s*. 6*d*.; 25th 1000, 1863, 7*s*. 6*d*.

"Admirably supplies a long-felt want."—Eng. Jour. of Educ.

10. Chronological Tables of Greek and Roman History, 1849, med. 8vo, 5*s*. Reprinted from the Dictionaries of Greek and Roman Biography and Antiquities. 11. New Classical Dictionary of Biography, Mythology, and Geography, in Nos., 1850, med. 8vo, pp. 832, with 750 wood-cuts, 21*s*.; 12th 1000, 1863, 18*s*.; last ed., Dec. 1866, 18*s*. Partly based on No. 2 and the then unpublished materials of No. 3.

"We recommend this New Classical Dictionary for universal adoption in classical schools. Nor is there any reason why it should be confined to schools."—Lon. Athen., 1851, 74.

Also commended by Exam., Spec., and John Bull. Revised by C. Anthon, LL.D., N. York, 1851, 8vo.

12. Smaller Classical Dictionary, [see No. 11,] for Young Persons, Lon., 1852, cr. 8vo, with 200 wood-cuts, 10*s*. 6*d*.; 25th 1000, 1863, 7*s*. 6*d*.; 9th Amer. ed., N. York, (London printed,) 1866, 12mo. 13. Latin-English Dictionary, based upon the Works of Forcellini and Freund, Lon., 1855, med. 8vo, pp. 1250, 21*s*.; 10th 1000, 1865, 21*s*.

"Of Latin and English Dictionaries the best representation of the scholarship of the day is undoubtedly that of Dr. Wm. Smith."—J. W. Donaldson, D.D.

"It is incomparably the best 'Latin-English Dictionary' in our language."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Oct. 1855, art. vi.

"No Latin-English Dictionary can be at all compared to Dr. W. Smith's."—Dr. Leon. Schmitz.

A similar verdict was pronounced by Notes and Queries, Athen., Spec., Eng. Churchman, and Examiner, all for 1855; and Sir G. C. Lewis, and Drs. Goodford, Hodson, Kynaston, and Scott, also praised the work. See, also, Westm. Rev., July, 1856, art. iii., and Lon. Reader, 1865, ii. 173; 1866, i. 118. 14. Smaller Latin-English Dictionary, [No. 13,] for the Use of Junior Classes, 1855, sq. 12mo, pp. 670, 7*s*. 6*d*.; 35th 1000, 1865.

"The abridgment has been made under the immediate superintendence of the author, and is an excellent adaptation of the larger work to the use of younger students, with some additions for their special advantage."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Oct. 1855, art. vi.

Also commended by Athen., Spec., Press, and Examiner, all for 1855.

15. First Latin Dictionary and Vocabulary, Nov. 1861, 12mo; 2d ed., 1863, 12mo. 16. Student's Latin Grammar for the Higher Forms, 1863, p. 8vo. 17. See, also, Shaw, Thomas Budd, Nos. 1 (last ed., 1869, 12mo) and 2, (last edits., 1869, 12mo, and N. York, by Dr. B. N. Martin, 1870.)

34. Smaller Classical Mythology, 1867, fp. 8vo. 35. With Hall, T. D., Grammar of the Latin Language, 1867, p. 8vo.

A New Biographia Britannica, a Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, a Classical and Biblical Atlas, a Smaller Scripture History, a Student's Hallam's Middle Ages, and a New English-Latin Dictionary, (the last in conjunction with T. D. Hall,) announced in connection with Dr. Smith's name, all as yet (Dec. 1869) remain unpublished.

"One of our first English scholars,—one who deals with the history and philosophy of the ancient classics, as well as with the technicalities of their language."—Lon. Lit. Gazette, 1852, 39.

To this it is proper to add that Dr. Smith's reputation as an English writer is only inferior to that which he enjoys as a classical philologist and philosophical commentator. His treatise on language, and articles on classical biography, in the Penny Cyclopædia, must be carefully perused by the student.

Smollett, Tobias George, M.D., the grandson of Sir James Smollett, of Bonhill, was born in the family mansion of Dalquhurn, parish of Cardross, Dumbartonshire, Scotland, 1721; studied at Dumbarton, and subsequently at Glasgow, in which city he also served an apprenticeship to a surgeon; lost his grandfather, who made no provision for his livelihood, in his 18th year; came to London at nineteen, and, after unsuccessfully offering The Regicide for the stage, at twenty sailed as surgeon's mate in the unfortunate expedition to Carthagena, of which he gives graphic accounts in his Compendium of Voyages and in Roderick Random; settled for some time in the West Indies, where he fell in love with Anne Lascelles, whom he married in 1747; returned to London in 1746, and, after vainly trying his fortune as a physician, commenced that literary life which, with more or less application, and, despite his frequent pecuniary embarrassments, certainly with more than average success, he followed until his death, which occurred near Leghorn, Italy, after a long illness, October 21, 1771. For the details of his social and literary career we refer the reader to the biographical sketches of Drs. Anderson and Moore and Mr. Roscoe, and the other authorities cited below.

"The person of Smollett," remarks Dr. Moore, "was stout and well proportioned, his countenance engaging, his manner reserved, with a certain air of dignity that seemed to indicate that he was not unconscious of his own powers. He was of a disposition so humane and generous that he was ever ready to serve the unfortunate, and on some occasions to assist them beyond what his circumstances could justify. . . . His learning, diligence, and natural acuteness would have rendered him eminent in the science of medicine had he persevered in that profession; other parts of his character were ill suited for augmenting his practice. He could neither stoop to impose on credulity nor humour caprice."

Dr. Moore's portrait is sufficiently favourable: a contentious disposition and domineering temper, a lavish indulgence in conversational sarcasm and written invective, are freely charged upon one who seems to be equally entitled to the praise of the "humane and generous" traits accorded by this biographer.

The order of his publications was as follows: 1. Advice a Satire, 1746, 4to. 2. Reproof; a Satire, being a Second Part of Advice, 1747, 4to. The severity of these hostile missives made the author many enemies. 3. The Adventures of Roderick Random, Lon., 1748, 2 vols. 12mo; 1750, 2 vols. 12mo; 7th ed., 1766, 2 vols. 12mo; 10th ed., 1778, 2 vols. 12mo; Edin., 1784, 2 vols. 8vo; in German, Berlin, 1790, 2 vols. 8vo, and in other foreign languages; in English, last edits., Lon., 1815, 24mo; 2 vols. 18mo; by T. Roscoe, 1836, 12mo; with Memoir, illust. by Phiz, 1857, 12mo; new ed., 1866, 12mo; 1867, 6*d*. This imitation of Le Sage at once made the author famous. 4. The Regicide; a Tragedy, 1749, 4to. Written in his 18th year. 5. The Adventures of Peregrine Pickle: in which are included the Memoirs of a Lady of Quality, 1751, 4 vols. 12mo; 2d ed., pruned of some indelicacies, 1751, 4 vols. 12mo; 1758, 4 vols. 12mo; 1781, 4 vols. 8vo; 1784, 3 vols. 12mo; many edits.: 1815, 2 vols. 24mo; 1823, 4 vols. 18mo; 2 vols. 24mo; by T. Roscoe, cuts by G. Cruikshank, 1836, 2 vols. 12mo; new ed., 1857, 12mo. The Lady of Quality was Lady Vane, who paid a large sum for this record of her shame. It elicited a number of tracts, the titles of some of which are recorded in Bohn's Lowndes, 2433. 6. Essay on the External Use of Water, &c., 1752, 4to. Published at a time when he attempted unsuccessfully to practise medicine at Bath. He subsequently retired to Chelsea, and continued his literary employments. 7. The Adventures of Ferdinand Count Fathom, 1753, 2 vols. 12mo; 1782, 2 vols. 8vo. Perhaps the most indecent production of a not too scrupulous writer. In this case prolixity has proved a safeguard. 8. Don Quixote; translated from the Spanish, to which is prefixed some Account of the Author's Life, 1755, 2 vols. 4to. Frequently reprinted in 4 vols. 18mo; also in 2 vols. 24mo, and ed. by T. Roscoe, 3 vols. 12mo. But see JARVIS, OR JERVAS, CHARLES; LOCKHART, JOHN GIBSON, No. 5; MOTTEUX, PETER ANTHONY; and Lord Woodhouselee's (Tytler) Essay on the Principles of Translation. His lordship shows that Smollett's translation is based upon that of Jarvis, than which it has less fidelity and more grossness. Smollett's version, so called, is indeed of little value, and by no means transfers the humour of the original:—it, however, transferred many guineas to the pockets of the ostensible translator. Coypel's Illustrations to the Adventures of Don Quixote, 25 engravings, imp. fol., by Cochin, Tardieu, &c., are highly esteemed. See, also, Doré's Don Quichotte, with 130 large and 200 small engravings, Paris, 1864, 2 vols. fol. 9. A Compendium of Authentic and Entertaining Voyages, 1757, 7 vols. 12mo. Anon. 10. The Reprisals; or, The Tars of Old England; a Comedy, 1757, 8vo. Successful. 11. A Compleat History of England, deduced from the Descent of Julius Cæsar to the Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, 1748, &c., 4 vols. 4to: i., ii., iii., 1757, (reviewed in Lon. Month. Rev., June, 1757;) iv. 1758; 2d ed., (sixpenny weekly Nos.,) 1758–60, 11 vols. 8vo; Continuation, 1748–60, 4 vols. 8vo, 1763, (reviewed in Lon. Month. Rev., April and May, 1763;) vol. v., written by William Guthrie, p. 751, supra, in Smollett's absence,) 1763–65 inc., 8vo, 1765. The contents of these 5 vols. 8vo were also pub. in 2 vols. 4to, 1766. New ed. of the whole work, 1771–84, 13 vols. 8vo. In 1789 the booksellers repub. that portion of Smollett's History which stretches from the Revolution to the death of George III., (1689–1760,) in 5 vols. 8vo, as a Continuation of Hume's History; and the two histories, as we have already seen, (HUGHES, THOMAS SMART, D.D., No. 4; HUME, DAVID, Nos. 3, &c.,) have been in the habit of keeping company unto this day,—later continuations being sometimes appended to them. Last edits. of Hume, Smollett, and Hughes, Longman, 1864, 8 vols. 8vo, £4; Bell & Daldy, 1865–66, 18 vols. cr. 8vo, £3 12*s*. For the reign of George III., Robert Bissett's History (p. 194, supra) has been recommended. Smollett's History is never republished, and probably never will be. One of the 50 copies on l. p., r. 8vo, 5 vols., W. Pickering, 1827, (see HUME, DAVID, No. 11,) in calf by Hayday, was sold at Fowle's sale, Dec. 1864, No. 675, for $187.50. The fact, often repeated, that the Transactions of "One Thousand Eight Hundred and Three Years," (we quote his own title-page,) which fill his four quarto volumes, (1757–58,) were written in fourteen months, forbids confidence in the same ratio in which it excites surprise. The "uncommon spirit and correctness of his style" have been praised by Sir Walter Scott, and his statements are doubtless often correct, (though, indeed, in many cases, as Dr. Johnson said to the Lichfield alderman, it is "impossible that he should know it;") but the cautious student will be unwilling to take him as authority. Notices of the History will be found in the Crit. Rev.; Dr. Thomas Comber's Vindication of the Revolution in England, 1668, &c., 1758, 8vo; Prof. Smyth's Lects. on Mod. Hist., Lects. XXVI. and XXVIII.; Warburton's Letters (from a Late Eminent Prelate, &c.) to Hurd, Lett. CXXV.; Nichols's Lit. Anec., viii. 229, (letter of Dr. Godwyn;) Goodhugh's E. G. Lib. Man., xliv., (letter of Dr. R. Farmer;) Lord Brougham's Men of Lett. Time Geo. III., ed. 1855, 246, n.; Edin. Rev., liii. 16, (by Dr. John Allen,) lxx. 149.

If nobody else profited by the History, Smollett certainly did,—to the extent (including the Continuation) of £2000 at least. The proposals of the sixpenny weekly reprint were widely circulated in the pews of the parish churches throughout England; and it is asserted that 20,000 copies were sold in less than a month.

12. The Adventures of Sir Launcelot Greaves, 1762, 2 vols. 12mo; 1782, 2 vols. 8vo; 1823, 18mo; by T. Roscoe, 12mo. A poor imitation of Don Quixote, (see Ticknor's Hist. of Span. Lit., ed. 1863, iii. 440,) originally pub. in the British Magazine, 1760–61, whilst the author was imprisoned for a libel (in the Critical Review) on Admiral Knowles. Sir Launcelot was imitated in The Spiritual Quixote, The Amicable Quixote, The Female Quixote, &c.

13. Gil Blas; translated from the French of Le Sage, 1761, 4 vols. 12mo; 4th ed., 1773, 12mo; 5th ed., 1781, 4 vols. 12mo; 6th ed., 1792, 4 vols. 12mo; 7th ed., 1797, 4 vols. 12mo; 1802, 3 vols. 8vo; some l. p.; last edits.: 2 vols. 24mo; 4 vols. 12mo; by T. Roscoe, 1835, 2 vols. 12mo; Gigoux's plates, 1836, (also 1838–39,) 2 vols. r. 8vo; also in 8vo and 12mo; Smirke's plates, 4 vols. 12mo; illust. ed., 1841, 8vo; also with text revised by Dr. B. H. Malkin, 1859, p. 8vo, (Bohn's Illust. Lib.,) new ed., 1861, 18mo; N. York, 1862; Bost., 1864, 3 vols. 16mo.

14. With FRANCKLIN, THOMAS, (p. 629, supra,) and others, The Works of M. de Voltaire; translated from the French; with Notes, Historical and Critical, in monthly 12mo 3*s*. vols., 37 in all, Lon., 1761–70, (also '74.) See Lon. Month. Rev., 1763, ii. 273. It has been asserted that Smollett and Francklin had no other connection with this translation than the sale of the use of their names; but this is disputed. 15. The Present State of all Nations, 1764, 8 vols. 8vo; also 1768. His share in this was small. 16. Roscoe, 1831, 12mo; with cuts by G. Cruikshank, 1836, 2 vols. 12mo; Leipsic, 1846, sq. 18mo; Lon., 1857, 12mo; 1861, 12mo. Esteemed the best of his novels.

"The novel of Humphrey Clinker is, I do think, the most laughable story that has ever been written since the goodly art of novel-writing began. Winifred Jenkins and Tabitha Bramble must keep Englishmen on the grin for ages yet to come; and in their letters and the story of their lives there is a perpetual fount of sparkling laughter as inexhaustible as Bladud's well."—W. M. THACKERAY: Eng. Humourists: Hogarth, Smollett, and Fielding.

See Mrs. Stone's Chronicles of Fashion, 2d ed., 1846, ii. 11, n.; ANSTEY, CHRISTOPHER. 19. Independence; an Ode, Glasg., 1773, 4to. Printed, with Observations, by Prof. Richardson. See Lon. Month. Rev., 1773, ii. 500. 20. The Adventures of Telemachus; translated from the French of Fénelon, Lon., 1776, 2 vols. 12mo.

In 1756 he became the first editor of The Critical Review, (a Tory opponent of the Whig organ, The Monthly Review;) subsequently contributed the histories of France, Italy, and Germany (for which he is said to have been paid £1575) to the Modern Part of An Universal History, 1759–64, 42 vols. 8vo, (Charts and Maps, 1766, fol.;) and from May 29, 1762, to Feb. 12, 1763 published The Briton,—opposed within a week, and killed in less than a year, by John Wilkes's North Briton. As a poet he is best known by his Tears of Scotland, (written in 1746,) elicited by the foray of the Duke of Cumberland in Scotland after the suppression of the Rebellion of 1745; and his Ode to Leven Water.

"The few poems which he has left have a portion of delicacy which is not to be found in his novels; but they have not, like those prose fictions, the strength of a master's hand. Were he to live over again, we might wish him to write more poetry, in the belief that his poetical talent would improve by exercise; but we should be glad to have more of his novels just as they are."—THOMAS CAMPBELL: Specimens, &c.

We beg leave to dissent: we could much better afford to lose those we have, than to take more, "just as they are." Several editions of his works have been published:

I. Plays and Poems; with Memoirs of his Life, Lon., 1777, 8vo; 1784, 8vo. II. Poems, with those of Johnson, Parnell, and Gray, with Memoirs, &c. by G. Gilfillan, all in 1 vol. 8vo, Edin., 1855. III. Dr. Alexander Carlyle, 1861, chaps. iv., vii., ix. See, also, Some Account of the Family of Smollett of Bonhill, (from J. Irving's Hist. of Dumbartonshire,) 2d ed., 1860, 4to. In most of these authorities the critics display their ingenuity, sometimes their judgment, in running contrasts between Smollett and Fielding. Sir Walter Scott's parallel is particularly commended to the reader.

"Smollett's humour arises from the situation of the persons or the peculiarity of their external appearance; as from Roderick Random's carroty locks, which hung down over his shoulders like a pound of candles, or Strap's ignorance of London, and the blunders that follow it. There is a tone of vulgarity about all his productions. The incidents frequently resemble detached anecdotes taken from a newspaper or magazine, and, like those in 'Gil Blas,' might happen to a hundred other characters. He exhibits the ridiculous accidents and reverses to which human life is liable,—not the stuff of which it is composed. He seldom probes to the quick, or penetrates beyond the surface, and, therefore, he leaves no stings in the minds of his readers, and in this respect is far less interesting than Fielding. His novels always enliven and never tire us; we take them up with pleasure, and lay them down without any strong feeling of regret. We look on and laugh as spectators of a highly amusing scene, without closing in with the combatants or being made parties in the event."—HAZLITT: Eng. Comic Writers, Lect. VI.

How critics disagree!

"Smollett seems to have had more touch of romance than Fielding, but not so profound and intuitive a knowledge of humanity's hidden treasures. There is nothing in his works comparable to Parson Adams; but then, on the other hand, Fielding has not any thing of the kind equal to Strap. Partridge is dry and hard, compared with this poor barber-boy, with his generous overflowings of affection. Roderick Random, indeed, with its varied delineation of life, is almost a romance. Its hero is worthy of his name. He is the sport of fortune, rolled about through the 'many ways of wretchedness,' almost without resistance, but ever catching those tastes of joy which are everywhere to be relished by those who are willing to receive them. We seem to roll on with him and get delectably giddy in his company."—SIR T. N. TALFOURD: New Month. Mag., and in his Crit. and Miscell. Writings.

"Smollett inherited from nature a strong sense of ridicule, a great fund of original humour, and a happy versatility of talent, by which he could accommodate his style to almost every species of writing. He could adopt, alternately, the solemn, the lively, the sarcastic, the burlesque, and the vulgar. To these qualifications he joined an inventive genius and a vigorous imagination."—LORD WOODHOUSELEE, (TYTLER:) Essay on the Principles of Translation.

Admiral Smyth also constructed many valuable charts; was one of the committee for improving and extending the Nautical Almanac; was Vice-President of the Royal Society and the Society of Antiquaries, and President of the Astronomical Society and the Royal Geographical Society; and held other honourable and responsible public posts. See Men of the Time, Lon., 1865, 754. Testimonials from sovereigns and scientific societies at home and abroad were among the minor rewards of an active and useful life. Among the greater compensations may be reckoned a filial imitation of a career consecrated to the interests of science and the benefit of man. (See SMYTH, CHARLES PIAZZI; SMYTH, WARINGTON WILKINSON.)

Some highly favourable references to Admiral Smyth's earlier days will be found in the Life and Correspondence of his excellent friend William Allen. (See SHERMAN, JAMES, No. 4.)

Also commended by five other authorities quoted in Lon. Athen., 1857, 548. Burthogge, in his Essay upon Human Reason and the Nature of Spirits, 1694, 8vo, broached the idealistic theory, sixteen years before the publication of Berkeley's Principles of Human Knowledge, 1710, 8vo; and Solly remarks that Burthogge's Essay "contains numerous passages expressing in clear and unequivocal language the general theory of Kant's Criticism of the Pure Reason as far as the understanding alone is concerned;" and he adduces three pages of citations: e.g.: "In truth, neither accident nor substance hath any being but only in the mind, and by the only virtues of cogitation or thought." Somers, John, Lord Somers, one of the most illustrious characters of English political history, the son of an attorney, was b. at Worcester, 1650; entered himself of the Middle Temple, and in 1674 was admitted a Commoner of Trinity College, Oxford; was called to the Bar, 1676, and commenced practice in London, 1682; one of the counsel for the seven bishops, 1688; at the Revolution, 1689, was a member of the first and chairman of the second of the committees which prepared the Declaration of Right; Solicitor-General, and knighted, May, 1689; Lord-Keeper of the Great Seal, March 23, 1692; Attorney-General, May 2, 1692: made Lord Chancellor and raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Somers of Evesham, in the county of Gloucester, 1697; deprived of the Great Seal, April 17, 1700; impeached and acquitted, 1701; President of the Royal Society, 1702; President of the Council, 1708, and held this office till the recovery of the Cabinet of Harley and the Tories in 1710; d. of apoplexy, April 26, 1716.

As an author he is chiefly known by his following publications: 1. The Memorable Case of Denzil Onslow, Esq., tried at the Assizes in Surrey, July 20, 1681, touching his Election. 2. Brief History of the Succession of the Crown, 1681; again, 1714. 3. Just and Modest Vindication of the Proceedings [on the exclusion of the Duke of York] of the two Last Parliaments, 1681. First penned by Algernon Sidney; drawn out anew (ut supra) by Somers; finally corrected by Sir William Jones, M.P., (1566–1640.) Pub. in Baldwin's collection of pamphlets in the Reign of Charles II. 4. The Security of Englishmen's Lives; or, The Trust, Power, and Duty of the Grand Juries of England, &c., 1681; 1715; Edin., 1718, 8vo; Lon., 1765, (some 1766,) 8vo. Notices of other publications of Somers will be found in Biog. Brit.; Park's Walpole's Royal and Noble Authors; the Memoirs of his lordship; and several of the authorities cited below. He contributed poetical versions of Ovid's Epistles of Dido to Æneas and of Ariadne to Theseus, to Tonson's edition of Ovid's Epistles in English; and a translation of Plutarch's Life of Alcibiades to the English Plutarch by Various Hands, also published by Tonson. The poem entitled Dryden's Satire to his Muse (written early in 1682) is attributed to Somers, but challenged by Walpole. Many of his MSS., some original, were destroyed after his death by a fire in the Chambers of his relative, Mr. Charles Yorke, Solicitor-General.

To the eminent merits of this great man we had intended to adduce the testimonies of Addison, (Freeholder, May 14, 1714; May 4, 1716, and Dedication to Spectator, vol. i.,) Swift, (Hist. of the Four Last Years of the Queen,) Bishop Burnet, (Hist. of his Own Times,) Walpole, (R. and N. Authors,) Sir J. Mackintosh, (Life, ii. ch. iii., and see his Miscell. Works,) and Lords Brougham, (Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1856, i. 185,) Campbell, (Lives of the Lord Chancellors, iv.,) and Macaulay, (Hist. of Eng., and see his Essays;) but these references, and a few others, must suffice. But we must not omit to notice A Collection of Scarce and Valuable Tracts on the Most Interesting and Entertaining Subjects, but chiefly such as relate to the History and Constitution of these Kingdoms, selected from an Infinite Number in Print and Manuscript, in the Royal Cotton, Sion, and other Public as well as Private Libraries; the Second Edition, Revised, Augmented, and Arranged by Walter Scott, Lon., 1809–15, 13 vols. r. 4to, £42. Dawson Turner, 1853, £15; B. Quaritch's Cat., 1868, 1140, £22 10s., 12321, £16 16s. There were 6 copies on thick paper. See Lockhart's Scott, ch. xix., (Scott received 1300 guineas for his trouble;) Dibdin's Lib. Comp., 2d ed., 293. These volumes, of which many of the originals were in his lordship's library, are known as the Somers Tracts. The first edition, in four sets of 4 vols. 4to each, was pub. by Cogan, 1748–52. A selection by R. Edwards, entitled A Collection of Scarce and Entertaining Tracts, &c., was pub. 1795, 4to. Scott's edition should be in every historical library: so should the Stuart Papers, (the publication of which was arrested by the death of Mr. Glover, Librarian to Queen Victoria, in 1860,) if they ever appear. A Life of Lord Somers worthy of the illustrious subject is yet to be written.

Somerton, A. Oeland; or, Thread of Life, Lon., 1855, 12mo.

Somerville, William, b. at the family seat, Edston, Warwickshire, in 1677, (not 1692, as Dr. Johnson states,) was admitted to Winchester School in 1690; in the same year became Fellow of New College, Oxford; resigned on succeeding to his patrimonial estate in 1704; divided his time between his justiceship of the peace, his books, hounds, and bottle, and d. July 19, 1742. Dr. Johnson's meagre account of his life has been recently corrected by the researches of Mr. Peter Cunningham: see his Johnson's Lives, 1854, 3 vols. 8vo; and consult, also, Shenstone's Works, iii. 49; Lady Luxborough's Letters, 175, 211; Memorie of the Somervilles, ii.; Lon. Gent. Mag., 84. 1. The Two Springs; a Fable, Lon., 1725, fol. 2. Occasional Poems, Translations, Fables, Tales, &c., 1727, 8vo. 3. The Chace; a Poem, 1735, 4to; 4th ed., 1743; again, 1757; Birm., 1767, 8vo; with a Critical Essay by John Aikin, M.D., 1796, 12mo, repub., 12mo; with 13 wood-cuts designed by John Bewick, engraved by Thomas Bewick, 1796, 4to; three copies on vellum, (see Blackw. Mag., xviii. 1;) 2d ed., with Bewick's cuts, 1802, imp. 8vo; ed by Topham, 12mo.

"To this poem praise cannot be totally denied. He is allowed by sportsmen to write with great intelligence of his subject, which is the first requisite to excellence."—Dr. Johnson: ubi supra.

4. Field Sports; a Poem, 1742, fol. See No. 5. 5. Hobbinol; or, The Rural Games; a Burlesque Poem in Blank Verse, 1740, 4to; 3d ed., 1740, 8vo; with Field Sports and the Bowling Green; with wood-cuts and tail-pieces by Thurston and Nesbitt, (Bulmer's ed.,) 1814, 4to. His Poetical Works, including The Chace, have been published together a number of times.

"Somerville has tried many modes of poetry; and, though perhaps he has not in any reached such excellence as to raise much envy, it may commonly be said at least that 'he writes very well for a gentleman.' His serious pieces are sometimes elevated, and his trifles are sometimes elegant."—Dr. Johnson: ubi supra.

Somerville, A. N. A Day in Laodicea, Lon., 1860, 18mo.

Somerville, David, a native of Scotland, and a minister of the Associate Synod of that country, emigrated to America in 1790 or 1791, preached in Pennsylvania and Virginia, and died in the latter State about 1793. He published a Sermon preached at Paisley, Scotland, and this was republished in Miller's Biographical Sketches and Sermons. See Sprague's Annals, ix., 1869, Associate, 50.

Somerville, Elizabeth. Sacred Lectures, 2 vols. Also novels and school-books, Lon., 1800–6: see Watt's Bibl. Brit.

Somerville, James, eleventh Lord, Laird of Drum, d. 1690, wrote in 1679 the following work, which remained in MS. in the family archives for 136 years: Memorie of the Somervilles; being a History of the Baronial House of Somerville, Edin., 1815, 2 vols. 8vo, £2 2s.; l. p., £3 3s. Only a few copies were published.

"This inimitable memoir was edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Sir Walter Scott, with more than his usual zeal and diligence, as one of the most curious pieces of Family History ever produced in the world."—Lockhart.

"The chief charm of the 'Memorie of the Somervilles' is an affectionate, antique enthusiasm for the subject, which gives a delightful naïveté to it."—Lon. Quar. Rev., April, 1856, (British Family Histories.)

Somerville, Lorenzo. Eros: a Series of Connected Poems, Lon., 1866, 12mo. Not commended by Atlantic Monthly, Aug. 1866, 265.

Somerville, Mary, a daughter of Admiral Fairfax, of the British Navy, b. 1780, at Burntisland, Fifeshire, Scotland, and married first to Mr. Greig, (a British officer,) and subsequently to Dr. Somerville, first attracted notice by experiments on the magnetic influence of the violet rays of the solar spectrum, (see Lon. Quar. Rev., xlvii. 547; Edin. Rev., lix. 171,) and has since gained great and deserved reputation by the four following important works: 1. Mechanism of the Heavens, Lon., 1831, 8vo; Phila., 1832, 18mo. Elicited by the request of Lord Brougham that Mrs. Somerville would prepare for the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge a popular summary of the Mécanique Céleste of La Place. The MS. was submitted to Sir J. F. W. Herschel, who pronounced it a book for posterity, but above the class whose instruction was designed by Lord Brougham. It was therefore issued as an independent work. The demonstrations of La Place are adopted, modified, or superseded, according to the judgment of Mrs. Somerville. The Preliminary Dissertation (pp. 70) was subsequently expanded into No. 2.

"This unquestionably is one of the most remarkable works that female intellect ever produced, in any age or country; and, with respect to the present day, we hazard little in saying that Mrs. Somerville is the only individual of her sex in the world who could have written it."—Edin. Rev., April, 1832, 1–25.

How the reviewer arrived at the last item of information with which he favours us, we are not advised. An exhaustive and impartial investigation could alone justify such a conclusion.

Other reviews of the Mechanism of the Heavens (which was adopted as a Cambridge text-book) will be found in Lon. Quar. Rev., xlvii. 547–58, and in Lon. Month. Rev., cxxvii. 133–41. See, also, Edin. Rev., lviii. 455.

"Mrs. Somerville's delightful volume on the 'Connexion of the Physical Sciences.' The style of this astonishing production is so clear and unaffected, and conveys, with so much simplicity, so great a mass of profound knowledge, that it should be placed in the hands of every youth the moment he has mastered the general rudiments of education."—Lon. Quar. Rev., l. 11, n. See, also, li. 54–68.

Alexander von Humboldt refers to the work as "the generally so exact and admirable treatise."

3. Physical Geography, Lon., 1848, 2 vols. 12mo; 2d ed., 1849; 3d ed., 1851; 4th ed., 1858, p. 8vo; 5th ed., 1862, p. 8vo; Amer. eds., Phila., r. 12mo, 1848, '50, '53, '56. See Ruschenberger, William S. W., M.D.

"We have thus followed Mrs. Somerville through her intellectual journey over the globe, delighted and improved by her instructions, and anxious that others should derive from them the same pleasure and advantage."—*N. In 1834 Mrs. Somerville was elected a member of The Learned and Scientific Society of Geneva, (see Lon. Times, 1834;) in 1835 was made an honorary member of the Royal Astronomical Society; and in the same year (see Southey's Life and Corresp., ch. xxxvi.) received from Sir Robert Peel a warrant on the Civil List Pension Fund for £300 per annum. Caldwell, M.D., 1855, 8vo; Mrs. Farrar's Recollec., Bost., 1865, 12mo. A portrait of Mrs. Somerville, by James Swinton, Esq., is prefixed to No. 3.

"Une science étendue et profonde, une grande force de raisonnement, les vues morales les plus élevées, et un style élégant caractérisent les ouvrages de Mme. Somerville. . . . Elle réside aujourd'hui avec son mari et ses deux filles, à Florence, où son esprit aimable n'est pas moins apprécié que son savoir."—Dict. univ. des Contemp., par G. Vapereau, Paris, 1858, 1604.

In May, 1869, Mrs. Somerville was presented by the Royal Geographical Society with The Patron or Victoria Medal; and at the dinner of the Society the President, Sir R. L. Murchison, said

"a few words respecting that venerable and eminent lady. . . . This admirable woman, now in her eighty-ninth year, who has been singularly distinguished throughout her long life by the highest attainments in physical science, and has written admirable works on physical geography, and is even at this hour occupied in solving abstruse mathematical problems."

Sotheby, Samuel, 1771–1842, a great-nephew of Samuel Baker, and surviving partner of the literary auction established by him, printed in 1826 a List of the Original Catalogues of Libraries sold by Messrs. Baker, Leigh & Sotheby, 1744–1826, 8vo. He was long engaged in collecting the materials for two important works since published by his son: see SOTHEBY, SAMUEL LEIGH, Nos. 2 and 3. An obituary notice of Mr. Sotheby (by Samuel Leigh Sotheby, infra) will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1842, i. 442.

Sotheby, Samuel Leigh, b. 1805, drowned in the river Dart, 1861, younger son and partner of the preceding, was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries and of the Royal Geographical and Numismatic Societies, and well known as a zealous and intelligent bibliographer.

1. Observations upon the Handwriting of Philip Melanchthon, illustrated with Fac-Similes from his Marginal Annotations, his Common-Place Book, and his Epistolary Correspondence; also a few Specimens of the Autograph of Martin Luther, with Explanatory Remarks, Lon., 1840, imp. 4to, or sm. fol., 33 plates, £2 12*s.* 6*d.* 150 copies. A notice of this interesting volume will be found in Lon. Gent. Mag., 1840, i. 59. 2. Collection of Fac-Similes of the Types, Wood-Cuts, and Capital Letters used by the Early Printers, 42 plates, 1840, fol. Privately printed. 3. Collection of Nearly Five Hundred Fac-Similes of Water Marks used by the Early Paper-Makers during the Latter Part of the Fourteenth and Early Part of the Fifteenth Centuries, 1840, fol. Privately printed. 4. The Typography of the Fifteenth Century: being Specimens of the Productions of the Early Continental Printers, exemplified in a Collection of Fac-Similes from One Hundred Works: Arranged and Edited from the Bibliographical Collections of the Late Samuel Sotheby, by his son, S. Leigh Sotheby, 1845, fol., £4. 100 copies. Fowle, Dec. 1864, 682, $50. There are some works with which, however desirable, the bibliographer can dispense without much loss: this and No. 3 are not of that number. 5. Principia Typographica: The Block-Books, or Xylographic Delineations of Scripture History, issued in Holland, Flanders, and Germany during the Fifteenth Century; exemplified and considered in connection with the Origin of Printing: to which is added an Attempt to Elucidate the Character of the Paper Marks of the Period: a Work contemplated by the Late Samuel Sotheby, and carried out by his Son, Samuel Leigh Sotheby, 1858, 3 vols. imp. 4to; several hundred plates and wood-cuts. 250 copies were published, of which 215 were sold at auction, April 28, 1858, by the author's partner, Mr. Wilkinson, for £2047,—about £9 10*s.* 5*d.* per copy: the selling-price since that date has been £10 10*s.* Fowle, Dec. 1864, $105. We have already given (No. 4, supra) our opinion of this splendid work. A notice of it will be found in Lon. Athen., 1858, i. 822. See, also, Willis & Sotheran's Cat., Sept. 25, 1858; Lon. Pub. Circ., May 1, 1858. Add to it, The History of Block-Printing, and the Early History of Engraving before Durer, by T. O. Weigel and Dr. Ad. Zestermann, with 145 fac-similes, Leipzig, 1866, 2 vols. fol., 325 copies. Sotheby, William, the eldest son of Colonel Sotheby, of the Guards, was b. in London, 1757, and educated at Harrow School; at the age of 17 became an officer of the 10th Dragoons; married Miss Mary Steel, of Ecton, and quitted the army, in 1780, and purchased Bevis Mount, near Southampton, where he resided for the next ten years; in 1788, with his brother, Admiral Sotheby, made a pedestrian tour through Wales, of which he published a poetical description, (No. 1, infra;) in 1791 removed to London, where and at Fair Mead Lodge, Epping Forest, (of which he was one of the master-keepers,) he chiefly resided until his death, Dec. 30, 1833. He was a gentleman of good family, large fortune, and pleasing address, and "given to hospitality;" therefore, of course, —having nothing to ask and much to bestow,—a general favourite in society. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society, of the Antiquarian Society, and of the Dilettanti Society, and one of the Council of the Literary Fund, of which he was an early and warm supporter. A very meagre notice of this amiable man, able translator, and elegant (not great) poet was inserted in the Gentleman's Magazine for May, 1834, 559. A prominent man of letters for so many years, we should suppose his correspondence to be well worth publication. 1. Poems; consisting of a Tour through Parts of North and South Wales; Sonnets, Odes, and an Epistle to a Friend on Physiognomy, Bath and Lon., 1790, 4to. 2. Tour through Parts of Wales, Sonnets, Odes, and other Poems, with 13 Engravings from Drawings taken on the Spot by J. Smith, Lon., 1794, 4to. 3. Oberon; a Poem; from the German of Wieland, 1798, 2 vols. sm. 8vo; 1826, 2 vols. 12mo; 1824, 24mo. Wieland was much pleased with the accuracy and spirit of this translation, the publication of which caused John Quincy Adams to withhold his version (vide p. 36, supra) from the world. Brief notices of Sotheby's translation will be found in Drake's Shaksp. and his Times, i. 565, n.; Green's Diary of a Lover of Lit., 1810, 4to, 172; Edin. Rev., iv. 296, 297, (by Lord Jeffrey,) li. 477; Lon. Month. Rev., Oct. 1810, 146; June, 1830, 225; and Blackw. Mag., xvii. 672. See No. 9. 4. The Battle of the Nile; a Poem, 1799, 4to. 5. The Siege of Cuzco; a Tragedy, in Five Acts, 1800, 8vo. 6. The Georgics of Virgil; translated into English Verse, 1800, 8vo; 2d ed., corrected, 1815, 8vo.

"A work of very high merit, and by far the best that has yet appeared of that poem."—TYTLER, (LORD WOODHOUSELEE.)

"If this be not the most perfect translation of a classic poet now extant in our language, it assuredly is capable of being advanced to that high distinction."—LORD JEFFREY: Edin. Rev., July, 1804, 303.

"It was not till lately that Mr. Sotheby combined the excellencies without the defects of his predecessors, and gave us so perfect a specimen of translation that those who can relish it have little reason to regret their want of acquaintance with the original."—Lon. Quar. Rev., Feb. 1809, 71.

"Not likely soon to have a rival in his specimens from Virgil."—Ibid., April, 1815, 155.

See, also, May, 1811, 438, and Edin. Rev., July, 1830, 477.

"Sotheby's Georgics stamped him the best translator in Christendom. That was, in my opinion, a more difficult achievement than an equally admirable translation of the Iliad. I have read his Specimens, [No. 19, infra,] and in an early Number—perhaps the next—intend to sift them thoroughly; comparing all the fine or difficult passages in the original, with Pope, Hobbes, Chapman, Cowper, and my friend Mr. Sotheby, who will probably be found, in the whole, to have excelled all his predecessors in this great task."—PROF. JOHN WILSON: Noctes Ambros., No. XLVIII.: Blackw. Mag., April, 1830, 686. See Nos. 20, 21, infra.

Another highly favourable review of this translation, with copious extracts, will be found in Lon. Month. Rev., May, 1831, 96–116; see, also, Oct. 1810, 146, June, 1830, 225. Mr. Sotheby republished the Georgics in No. 17, infra; and they have been published together with the Eclogues by Wrangham and the Æneid by Dryden in 2 vols. 18mo. 7. Julian and Agnes; or, The Monks of the Great St. Bernard; a Tragedy, 1801, 8vo. Acted at Drury Lane, April 25, 1800. A "touching scene" which occurred on the first representation had any thing but a tragic effect:

"In the course of its performance, Mrs. Siddons, as the heroine, had to make her exit from the scene with an infant in her arms. Having to retire precipitately, she inadvertently struck the baby's head violently against a door-post. Happily the little thing was made of wood, so that her doll's accident only produced a general laugh, in which the actress herself joined heartily."

This was a heavy "blow" to the tragedy: after such a mischance, Macready's Lear or Fanny Kemble's Mrs. Haller could not have drawn a single tear from that audience. To the poor author the sight of a baby must have long been distasteful.

"It will be evident, from what we have said and quoted, that Mr. Sotheby has united with a classical closeness of translation considerable harmony of numbers."—Edin. Rev., July, 1830, 463–77.

This review was commented on in Lon. Gent. Mag., Dec. 1830, 514.

Professor Wilson (vide No. 6, supra) devoted to this translation five critiques published in Blackwood's Magazine, as follows: I. April, 1831, 668–88; II. May, 1831, 829–66; III. July, 1831, 93–125; IV. Dec. 1831, 847–89; V. Feb. 1832, 145–80. These were repub. in the collective edition of Wilson's Works, viii., (iv. of the Essays,) 1857, 1–295; pp. 296–389 of this series (Homer and his Translators) are occupied by a reprint of Wilson's two critiques (Blackw. Mag., Jan. 1834, 1–26, Feb. 1834, 153–82) on the Odyssey, (vide No. 21, infra.) He promised a third critique, but it never appeared; and the promise is not reprinted in the volume just referred to. What he thought of Sotheby's abilities as a translator of Homer is thus briefly summed up in advance of his detailed examination:

"Let it at once suffice for Mr. Sotheby's satisfaction that we say he is entitled—and we do not know another person of whom we could safely say as much—to deal with that well-booted Grecian, even at this time of day, after all that has been done to, in, with, and by 'Him of the Iliad and the Odyssey,' by not a few of our prevailing poets."—Critique I., Blackw. Mag., April, 1831, 669; and in Wilson's Works, viii. 4.

21. The Iliad and Odyssey of Homer; translated into English Verse, 1834, 4 vols. 8vo; 75 designs of Flaxman. (See FLAXMAN, JOHN.) See No. 20. We have already intimated that Sotheby (as has been said of Dr. Johnson in another sense) was greater in other men's books than in his own,—an admirable translator, but with slender claims to original genius:

"Sotheby was never great," remarks Mr. Moir, "except when treading in some beaten path. His 'Saul,' an epic poem, and his 'Constance de Castile,' a romance in the manner of Scott, as well as his 'Italy,' a descriptive poem, contain each fine and spirited passages; but even these are almost always reflections of what has attracted his own particular admiration in others."—Sketches of the Poet. Lit. of the Past Half-Century, Lect. I.

Byron said of Sotheby that he imitated everybody, and occasionally surpassed his models. Allan Cunningham (Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit., &c.) allows him "merit as an original writer." His Address on the Character of Sir H. C. Englefield was published in Lon. Gent. Mag., May, 1822, 418–20: see, also, ENGLEFIELD, SIR HENRY CHARLES, M.P. Notices of Sotheby will be found in Lockhart's Scott, ch. xv.; Southey's Life and Corresp., ch. x.; T. Moore's Memoirs, and Blackw. Mag., xlviii. 363; and a letter of his to Bishop Percy has been recently published in Nichols's Illust. of Lit., viii., 1858, 324.

Sotwell, Sotwellus, but properly Southwell, Nathaniel, an Englishman, who became a Jesuit in 1624, and was Secretary to the General of the Order, say 1648 to 1675, being employed to write the lives of eminent authors among the Jesuits, carried on the plan of Ribadeneira and Alegambe down to 1675. His improved edition was published under the title of Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu, Opus inchoatum a R. P. Petro Ribadeneira, et productum ad Annum 1609; continuatum a Philippo Alegambe ad Annum 1643; recognitum et productum ad Annum 1675, a Nathanaelo Sotwello, Romæ, 1676, fol. This is of course the best edition of this collection; but Alegambe's, so far as it goes, is said to be more correct. The work was continued by Oudin, who commenced his labours in 1733, to great satisfaction. Southwell died in Rome, in 1676. See Antonio, Bibl. Hisp.; Moreri; Baillet, Jugem. des Savans; Dodd's Ch. Hist.

Souder, Casper, b. in Philadelphia, 1819; d. in that city, Oct. 20, 1868; was connected with the (Philadelphia) Evening Bulletin, as reporter, 1850 to 1854, and co-proprietor and co-editor from 1854 until his death. Among his contributions to papers was a History of Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, which he intended to republish in a folio volume. South, Robert, D.D., the son of a London merchant, was b. at Hackney, Middlesex, 1633; in 1648 was a king's scholar, under Dr. Busby, at Westminster, and on the day of the execution of Charles I., (Jan. 30, 1649,) in leading the devotions of the school, prayed for his majesty by name; in 1651 was admitted a student of Christ Church, Oxford, and graduated B.A., 1655; ordained by a deprived bishop, 1658; Public Orator of the University of Oxford, 1660; chaplain to Lord-Chancellor Clarendon, 1661; Preb. of Westminster, and D.D., 1663; chaplain to James, Duke of York, 1667; Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, 1670; chaplain to Laurence Hyde, (afterwards Earl of Rochester,) Ambassador-Extraordinary to Poland, 1677; Rector of Islip, Oxfordshire, 1678; d. 1716. He was equally distinguished for learning, wit, loyalty, pecuniary generosity, personal disinterestedness, and theological and political intolerance. To his controversy with Sherlock, and the war of pamphlets by which it was carried on, we have already sufficiently referred, (SHERLOCK, WILLIAM, D.D., No. 5.) The year after his death, (i.e. in 1717,) a volume containing his Posthumous Works,—three of his sermons, his Will, Latin poems, and orations delivered while Public Orator of the University of Oxford,—with Memoirs of his Life, were published in an octavo volume. His Musica Incantans, &c. appeared 1667, 4to. He also published a number of single sermons, 1660–66, Assize Sermons, 1660, (again, 1668,) 4to, and a collective edition of his Sermons, in 6 vols. 8vo, in 1692, &c.; again, 1697, &c.; 3d ed., 1704; also in 1715, in 1722, and in 1727. To these were added, in 1744, 5 vols. 8vo. These 11 vols., with the three sermons and the Memoirs of his Life in the vol. of Posthumous Works, were republished at Oxford (Clarendon Press) in 1823, 7 vols. 8vo; again, 1842, 5 vols. 8vo. Another ed. was published Edin., 1843, 2 vols. r. 8vo; another by Tegg, London, 1843, (also 1845,) 4 vols. 8vo; another by H. G. Bohn, 1844, (also 1845, '46, '50, and '55,) 2 vols. (also in 8 Pts.) r. 8vo; another in Philadelphia, 4 vols. in 2 vols. 8vo; another in New York, 4 vols. 8vo. Sermons preached upon Several Occasions, ed. by Rev. W. G. T. Shedd, D.D., N. York, (Hurd & Houghton's Lib. of Old English Divines,) 5 vols. 8vo, 1867 et seq. See, also, The Wisdom of the Fathers: a Selection from the Writings of Robert South, D.D.; with a Memoir, Lon., 1867, cr. 8vo. One of the most famous of his sermons,—Adam in Paradise,—with an Analysis and Preface by Basil Montagu, Esq., was published Lon., 1860, 18mo.

"The English language affords no higher specimen of its richness and strength than is to be found in this beautiful discourse . . . Every student for the Pulpit or the Bar should read this eloquent Sermon."—BASIL MONTAGU: Preface.

This sermon is also republished (with a preface) in Fish's Master-Pieces of Pulpit Eloquence, N. York, 1857, i. 284–98.

"There is a curious sermon on the state of Adam in Paradise: it displays a most lively imagination, and contains some new and pleasing thoughts. Parts may be considered beautiful, but they are not adapted for selection: they are almost buried in the rubbish of bad metaphysics and puerile conceits."—Lon. Retrosp. Rev., ix., 1824, 299.

Nor should we omit to notice The Beauties of Dr. South: consisting of Extracts from his Works, Lon., 1795, 8vo. See, also, BROOME, REV. ARTHUR. A vol. of Maxims, &c., Extracted from his Writings, appeared 1717, 8vo; one of his pieces will be found in Tracts of Angl. Fathers, iii. 335; and several of his compositions are republished in Wordsworth's Christian Institutes, i. 643, iii. 418, iv. 3.

When we look around us at the opinions of distinguished critics respecting the merits of this "learned but ill-natured divine," as Bishop Burnet (Hist. of My Own Times, Year 1698) justly styles him, we are oppressed by the embarras de richesses: a few citations, however, must be made.

"South is one of the best, if you except his peculiarities, and his violence, and sometimes coarseness, of language."—DR. JOHNSON: Boswell's Life of Johnson, ch. lxii. See, also, ch. xxiii.

"Sharp wit, keen satire, characterize his volumes."—DR. DODDRIDGE.

"Wit was his talent; yet he often reaches sublimity. He is, however, one of those authors who, in some respects, are to be admired and not imitated. To excite a laugh from the pulpit is to inspire the hearer with a levity of temper ill adapted to the indulgence of devotional feelings."—DR. KNOX.

"The spirit of South was embittered against Dissenters."—E. BICKERSTETH.

"Buy them forthwith; for they will delight the very cockles of thy heart."—ROBERT SOUTHEY: Life and Corresp., ch. xxxi. See, also, chaps. xix. and xxvi.

"South had great qualifications for that popularity which attends the pulpit, and his manner was at that time original. Not diffuse, not learned, not formal in argument like Barrow, with a more natural structure of sentences, a more pointed, though by no means a more fair and satisfactory, turn of reasoning, with a style clear and English, free from all pedantry, but abounding with those colloquial novelties of idiom which, though now become vulgar and offensive, the age of Charles II. affected; sparing no personal or temporary sarcasm; but if he seems for a moment to tread on the verge of buffoonery, recovering himself by some stroke of vigorous sense and language; such was the witty Dr. South, whom the courtiers delighted to hear."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, iii., Pt. 4, ch. ii., sec. 56. See, also, sec. 25.

"Nor can the ingenuity, the subtlety, the brilliancy of South, though too exuberant in point, and drawing away the attention from the subject to the epigrammatic diction, be regarded otherwise than as proofs of the highest order of intellect."—LORD BROUGHAM: Contrib. to Edin. Rev., 1856, i. 128. See, also, 113.

cies of pulpit eloquence. . . . His style is . . . everywhere direct, condensed, pungent. His sermons are well worthy of frequent and diligent perusal by every young preacher."—Henry Rogers: Edin. Rev., lxxii. 82.

"Forced conceits, unnatural metaphors, absurd similes, turgid and verbose language, occasionally disfigure the pages of South. But we will, as usual, charge these faults on the times in which he lived, and attribute to his own good sense and ingenuity the numerous beauties he possesses. . . . South's sermons are adapted to all readers and all days."—Lon. Retrosp. Rev., ix. 291–303, (q. v.)

"South's sentences are gems, hard and shining: Voltaire's look like them, but are only French paste."—Hare: Guesses at Truth, First Series.

Southcomb, Lewis. Five single sermons, 1692–1752.

Southcott, Joanna, a silly, ignorant enthusiast or designing impostor, as opinions vary, was b. in Devonshire about 1750, and for a long time gained her living honestly and respectably as a domestic servant; commenced prophesying about 1792; professed to lay in of the Shiloh, Oct. 19, 1814, at 12 P.M., (having then, it is asserted, 100,000 followers;) d., probably of the dropsy that aided her delusions, Dec. 27, 1814. Her resurrection was long looked for; and as late as 1851 there were in England four small congregations of her disciples, nor were believers extinct in 1866. Her history, we are happy to say, does not enter into the plan of our work: we cannot, however, entirely exclude from a Dictionary of Authors one who put forth nearly sixty publications, (London, Stourbridge, Leeds, 1792–1814,) declarative, expositive, or prophetic. Among the best-known of these are: 1. The Strange Effects of Faith, with Remarkable Prophecies, 6 8vo Pts., Exeter, 1801–2.

"As for Joanna, though tolerably well versed in the history of human credulity, I have never seen any thing so disgraceful to common sense as her precious publications."—Robert Southey: Letter to J. Rickman, March 15, 1806: Southey's Life and Corresp., ch. xii.

"I shall send the trash of her productions to Vernor and Hood to be conveyed to your lordship this day."—Rev. T. Thirlwell to Bishop Percy, Jan. 7, 1808: Nichols's Illust. of Lit., viii. 390.

2. Warning to the Whole World, Lon., 1804, 8vo. 3. Letters, &c. sent to W. Sharp, 1804, 8vo. 4. True Explanation of the Bible, 1804, 7 8vo Pts. 5. The Book of Wonders, 1813–14, 5 8vo Pts. 6. Prophecies announcing the Birth of the Prince of Peace, 1814, 8vo. Perhaps the most complete collection of her publications extant (nearly 60 pieces, 1792–1814, bound in 6 vols. 8vo) was recently offered for sale (£3 10*s.*) by John Camden Hotten, the London antiquary and bookseller. A few are recorded in Watt's Bibl. Brit. A lady named Essam left a large sum of money for printing and publishing "The Sacred Writings of Joanna Southcott:" a niece of the testatrix disputed the bequest, on the ground that the writings in question are not sacred, but blasphemous; but the English Court of Chancery in 1862 sustained the will. See Observations on the Divine Mission of Joanna Southcott, by Roberts, 1807, 8vo; Correct Statement of the Circumstances that attended the Last Illness and Death of Mrs. Southcott, by Richard Reece, M.D., 1815, 8vo, (reviewed in Edin. Southern, Henry C. B., H.M.'s Minister at the Court of the Brazils, d. at Rio Janeiro, Jan. 28, 1853, aged 54; graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge, B.A. 1819, M.A. 1822; was the originator and editor of The Retrospective Review, 1820–26, 14 vols. 8vo, (see, also, Nicolas, Sir Nicholas Harris, p. 1428, supra;) and editor of The Antiquarian Classics, (see Bohn's Lowndes, 2849;) co-editor, with Dr. (now Sir John) Bowring, of the Westminster Review; proprietor and editor of the second series of the London Magazine; and a contributor to The Atlas, The Spectator, and The Examiner. Southerne, Edmund. Treatise concerning the Right Vse and Ordering of Bees, Lon., 1593, 4to.

Southerne, or Southern, Thomas, b. at Oxmanton, co. of Dublin, 1660; was admitted a student of Trinity College, Dublin, 1676; entered the Middle Temple, London, 1678, but cultivated dramatic literature in preference to law, and became a popular writer of plays; served a short time in the army, where he attained the rank of captain, and after his retirement continued his literary pursuits,—which were successful both in point of profit (by one play he cleared £700) and as an introduction to the best company (Dryden, Pope, Gray, &c.) of his day. He is said to have died "the oldest and the richest of his dramatic brethren." This would make him neither a Methuselah nor a Crœsus. He died May 26, 1746, in his 86th year. A collection of his plays was published Lon., 1713, 2 vols. 12mo; again, 1721, 2 vols. 12mo; and a better one, under the following title, Plays written by Thomas Southern, Esq., now first collected, with an Account of the Life and Writings of the Author, 1774, 3 vols. 12mo. The only two of his plays now known to the public are the ones thus commented on by Mr. Hallam:

"Southern's Discovery, latterly represented under the name of Isabella, is almost as familiar to the lovers of our theatre as Venice Preserved itself; and for the same reason, that whenever an actress of great tragic powers arises, the part of Isabella is as fitted to exhibit them as that of Belvidera. The choice and conduct of the story are, however, Southern's chief merits; for there is little vigour in the language, though it is natural, and free from the usual faults of his age. A similar character may be given to his other tragedy, Oroonoko, in which Southern deserves the praise of having first of any English writer denounced the traffic in slaves and the cruelties of their West Indian bondage. The moral feeling is high in this tragedy, and it has sometimes been acted with a certain success; but the execution is not that of a superior dramatist."—Lit. Hist. of Europe, iii., Pt. 4, ch. vi. sec. xlvi.

"Mr. Gray," says Mason, "always thought highly of his pathetic powers, at the same time that he blamed his ill taste for mixing them so injudiciously with farce, in order to produce that monstrous species of composition called Tragi-Comedy."

In his latter days Southerne regretted that he had so far yielded to this dramatic vice of the age.

Southey, Caroline Anne, (neither "the sister" nor "the daughter," and not proved to be even a relative, "of the Rev. William Lisle Bowles,") only child of Captain Charles Bowles, and niece of Lieut.-Gen. Sir Harry Burrard, was b. December 6, 1787, at her father's house, Buckland, Hants, and resided at this place all her life, excepting the period from her marriage with Robert Southey in 1839 until his death in 1843. She died July 20, 1854. For more than twenty years her writings were published without her name, (many were contributed to Blackwood's Magazine, under the signature of C.: see Index to Blackw. Mag., vols. i.–l., 1855, p. 63;) and it was not until 1820 that she collected any of these into volumes. The list of her works runs as follows: 1. Ellen Fitzarthur; a Metrical Tale, Lon., 1820, 12mo. Anon. Commended by Lon. Lit. Gaz. Its publication was encouraged by Southey. See No. 2. 2. The Widow's Tale, and other Poems; by the author of Ellen Fitzarthur, 1822, 12mo. Anon. This and No. 1 were praised by Blackw. Mag., xi. 288, and Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxvi. 402. 3. Solitary Hours, (Poems,) 1826, 12mo; 2d ed., 1839, fp. 8vo. Commended by Lon. Quar. Rev., and Lon. Lit. Gaz., 1826, 371. 4. Chapters on Churchyards, 1829, 2 vols. fp. 8vo; 2d ed., 1841, fp. 8vo. These Chapters attracted much attention when first published in Blackw. Mag. She published no other prose work. 5. The Birth-Day; a Poem, in three Parts: to which are added Occasional Verses, Edin., 1836, fp. 8vo; again, Lon., 1849; new ed., 1854. Commended by Lon. Athen., 1836, 463, and Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxvi. 403. 6. Tales of the Factories, fp. 8vo. 7. Robin Hood: a Fragment; by the Late Robert Southey and Caroline Southey; with other Fragments and Poems by R. S. and C. S., 1847, 12mo. Noticed in Lon. Athen., 1847, 512. She also edited vol. i. of The Life of the Rev. Andrew Bell, D.D., written by Robert Southey: vols. ii. and iii. were written by the Rev. Charles Cuthbert Southey, (infra.) In the United States the writings of Mrs. Southey have long been popular; and there are American republications of several of her works: Chapters on Churchyards, N. York, 12mo; The Early Called, Phila., 1836, 12mo; Village Life, N. York, 18mo; Autumn Flowers, and other Poems, Bost.; Solitary Hours, N. York, 1846, 12mo; and collections of her Poems, in 1 vol. each, at Phila., 32mo, N. York, 24mo, 1847, 12mo, (Wiley & Putnam's Lib. of Ch. R., 2 Pts.,) Hartford, 18mo. Poetical Works, new ed., Edin., Blackwood, 1867, 12mo. Specimens of her poetry will be found in Rowton's F. Poets of G. Brit., 397, Bethune's Brit. F. Poets, 327, and in other selections, (see, also, Liv. Age, xi. 230, and Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., ii. 485.) Obituary notices of Mrs. Southey appeared in Lon. Athen., 1854, 944, 969, and Lon. Gent. Mag., 1854, ii. 309. See, also, Southey's Life and Corresp., chaps. xxix., xxxiv., xxxviii.; Blackw. Mag., xxvii. 632; Lon. Athen., 1847, 125. After her husband's death she was placed on the Civil List for a pension of £200 per annum. She left many unpublished letters of Southey as a bequest to the poet's son-in-law and editor, the Rev. John Wood Warter, (see Southey, Robert, LL.D.)

"Miss Bowles is equal to Mrs. Hemans."—Prof. Wilson: Noctes Ambros.: Blackw. Mag., 1828, ii. 674.

"We doubt if the English language possesses any thing more profoundly pathetic than Mrs. Southey's four tales, 'The Young Grey Head,' 'The Murder Glen,' 'Walter and William,' and 'The Evening Walk.'"—D. M. Moir: Poet. Lit. &c., Lect. VI.

"If Mrs. Norton is the Byron, Mrs. Southey (Caroline Bowles) is the Cowper, of our modern poetesses. She has much of that great writer's humour, fondness for rural life, melancholy pathos, and moral satire. She has also Cowper's pre-eminently English manner in diction and thought."—H. N. Southey, Robert, LL.D., whose earlier days have been briefly referred to on a preceding page, (see Coleridge, Samuel Taylor,) was the son of a linen-draper of Bristol, where he was born, August 12, 1774; received his early education at Bristol, Corston, and (from 1788 to 1792) Westminster; was admitted to Balliol College, Oxford, Nov. 3, 1792, (his uncle, the Rev. Herbert Hill, intending him for the Church,) went up to reside, Jan. 1793, and left in 1794, in which year he published Wat Tyler, a Dramatic Poem, Lon., 12mo; was married to Miss Edith Fricker, of Bristol, Nov. 14, 1795, and on the same day started for Lisbon with his uncle, who was chaplain to the British Factory at that place; returned to Bristol in the summer of 1796; removed to London in February, 1797; entered himself a student of Gray's Inn, and commenced the study of law, which he soon, however, relinquished; again visited Lisbon, and after his return became, in 1801, private secretary to Mr. Corry, Chancellor of the Exchequer for Ireland; resigned this office in a little over six months, and resolved to devote himself to literature, to which he had already made some published contributions; in 1804 established himself at Greta Hall, near Keswick, Cumberland, and there spent the remaining forty years of a most industrious life; lost his first wife, who had previously suffered for about three years under derangement, Nov. 16, 1837; married Caroline Anne Bowles, June 5, 1839; shortly afterwards sank into a state of mental imbecility, from which he never fully recovered, and died in his 69th year, March 21, 1843. In his youth he was for a short time "a liberal," both in politics and religion: his later opinions respecting Church and State were of a very different cast. In 1807 he received for literary services a pension, of which the clear receipts, £144 per annum, were appropriated to pay the premiums on his life insurance, (he had previously been indebted to his friend C. W. W. Wynn for £160 per annum;) on the death of Pye he was made Poet-Laureate; in 1821 he was honoured by the University of Oxford with the degree of LL.D.; in 1835, by the good offices of Sir Robert Peel, he was placed upon the Civil List for a pension of £300, having previously declined a baronetcy; he was also returned to Parliament for the borough of Downton, but refused to serve. The particulars of his life, expanded to great length in his voluminous correspondence, will be found in the volumes, hereafter to be noticed, published by his son and son-in-law, the Rev. Charles Cuthbert Southey and the Rev. John Wood Warter.

Greatly embarrassed for many years of his life by the res angusta domi, he was yet enabled by dint of strenuous exertion and provident foresight in his life insurance to leave to his heirs about £12,000, and a very valuable library, afterwards sold at auction in London: see Fraser's Magazine, xxx. 87; Kerslake's Catalogue of Books, containing a Considerable Portion of the Library of the Late Robert Southey, Bristol, (1845,) 8vo. That he did more than his share in filling the libraries of others, the following list of his publications (after Wat Tyler) is ample evidence.

1. With Lovel, Robert, Poems by Bion and Moschus, Bristol, 1794, (some 1795,) 8vo.

2. Joan of Arc; an Epic Poem, 1796, 4to; 2d ed., 1798, 2 vols. 12mo, and some large vellum paper, 8vo; Lon., 1798, 2 vols. 12mo; Bost., 1798, 2 vols. 12mo; 3d ed., Lon., 1806, 2 vols. fp. 8vo; 4th ed., 1812, 2 vols. 12mo; 1815, 2 vols. 12mo; 1853, 12mo; with Minor Poems, 1853, 12mo; 1858, 12mo; 1866, 12mo.

"Why, the poem is alone sufficient to redeem the character of the age we live in from the imputation of degenerating in poetry."—Works of Charles Lamb, ii., (q. v.)

See, also, Moore's Byron, ii.; Pursuits of Lit., Dial. IV., n. 103; Blackw. Mag., xxvi. 953.

"A pleasant book, written in the clear, idiomatic English that always distinguishes his style."—George Ticknor: Hist. of Span. Lit., ed. 1863, i. 11, n.

4. Minor Poems, Bristol, 1797–99, 2 vols. 12mo.

5. Annual Anthology; a Collection of Poems, Sonnets, Epigrams, &c., by Coleridge, Charles Lamb, Southey, [editor,] Sir H. Davy, Mrs. Opie, Cottle, &c., Bristol, 1799–1800, 2 vols. 12mo.

"These contain the earliest productions of Southey and Coleridge, and which have not been admitted into the collected editions of their Works."

6. Thalaba the Destroyed; a Metrical Romance, Lon., 1801, 2 vols. cr. 8vo; 1803, 2 vols.; 1809, 2 vols. 8vo, 1814, 2 vols. 12mo; 1853, 12mo.

10. Madoc; a Poem, in Two Parts, 1805, 4to; Edin., 1805, 4to, some on thick paper; Bost., 1806, 8vo; 2d ed., Lon., 1807, 2 vols. 12mo; 1811, 2 vols. 12mo; 1815, 2 vols. 12mo; 1853, 12mo.

"Madoc," exclaims the author, in 1795, whilst engaged in the composition of this poem, "is to be the pillar of my reputation." (Life and Corresp., ch. iii.) The "pillar" was rudely shaken by the Samson of the Edinburgh Reviewers, (see JEFFREY, FRANCIS, LORD, p. 960, supra,) greatly to the disgust of the poet. The critic of the Annual Review (1805) commends Madoc highly. For other notices of it, see Lon. Month. Rev., 1805; Lon. Gent. Mag., ii. 353, n.; Dibdin's Lib. "The best work on the subject. The favourite of my library, among many favourites: the book I can read for the twentieth time, when I can read nothing else at all."—S. T. COLERIDGE.

"To this work, and to the Life of R. Baxter, I was used to resort whenever sickness and languor made me feel the want of an old friend of whose company I could never be tired. How many and many an hour of self-oblivion do I owe to this Life of Wesley! and how often have I argued with it, questioned, remonstrated, been peevish, and asked pardon—then again listened, and cried, Right! Excellent! and in yet heavier hours intreated it, as it were, to continue talking to me,—for that I heard and listened, and was soothed, though I could make no reply! Ah! that Robert Southey had fulfilled his intention of writing a History of the Monastic Orders,—or would become the Biographer at least of Loyola, Xavier, Dominic, and the other remarkable Founders."—S. T. COLERIDGE: note in his copy of vol. i., pub. in 3d ed., 1846.

"The manner in which this most delightful of all books of biography has been received by the Wesleyan Methodists, demonstrates the justice of the main fault which judicious men charge against the work, viz.: partiality towards the sect and its founder; a venial fault, indeed, the liability to which is almost a desirable qualification in a biographer."—S. Nor must the 10 volumes of Southey's Life and Correspondence and Selections from his Letters be unaccompanied by A Memoir of the Life and Writings of the Late William Taylor of Norwich, including his Correspondence, for Many Years, with the Late Robert Southey, Esq., and other Eminent Men; Compiled and Edited by J. W. Robberds, Esq., (q. v.,) 1843, (some 1844,) 2 vols. 8vo. We have not yet completed the register of Southey's published productions: in the Appendix to his Life and Correspondence by his Son we find enumerated 94 articles in The Quarterly Review, (Nos. 1–126, 1830–38,) 52 in the Annual Review, (vols. i.–iv., 1802–5,) and 3 in The Foreign Quarterly Review. He also wrote the historical part of The Edinburgh Annual Register for 1808–9–10, and other papers for that work, and contributed to The Critical Review. See, also, WARTON, THOMAS, No. 14; WATTS, ISAAC, D.D., No. 1. Two of his articles in Quar. Rev., xiii. 215 (a review of G. Elliott's Life of Wellington) and 448, were published together in book-form as Summary of the Life of the Duke of Wellington, &c., Dubl., 1816, p. 4to.

Several years since there was announced, by Mr. Murray, "Southey's Essays on Biography, History, Voyages, and General Literature; being a Selection from Mr. Southey's Contributions to the Quarterly Review; Edited by his Son, the Rev. Charles C. Southey. It will form 3 vols. 8vo, uniform with the Essays of Macaulay and Sydney Smith." These volumes never appeared. Many of his unpublished MSS. were destroyed by his own hands.

SOUTHEY THE POET.

"Southey, among our living Poets, stands aloof and 'alone in his glory;' for he alone of them all has adventured to illustrate, in Poems of magnitude, the different characters, customs, and manners of nations. 'Joan of Arc' is an English and French story; 'Thalaba,' Arabian; 'Kehama,' Indian; 'Madoc,' Welsh and American; and 'Roderick,' Spanish and Moorish: nor would it be easy to say (setting aside the first, which was a very youthful work) in which of these noble Poems Mr. Southey has most successfully performed an achievement entirely beyond the power of any but the highest genius. . . . Of all his chief Poems the conception and the execution are original; in much, faulty and imperfect both; but bearing throughout the impress of original power, and breathing a moral charm in the midst of the wildest, and sometimes even extravagant, imaginings, that shall preserve them forever from oblivion, embalming them in the spirit of delight and of love."—PROFESSOR WILSON: Recreations of Christopher North: An Hour's Talk about Poetry.

A later very eminent critic is incredulous as respects the non-oblivion:

"His poems, taken in the mass, stand far higher than his prose works. The Laureate Odes, indeed, among which the Vision of Judgment must be classed, are, for the most part, worse than Pye's, and as bad as Cibber's; nor do we think him generally happy in short pieces. But his longer poems, though full of faults, are nevertheless very extraordinary productions. We doubt greatly whether they will be read fifty years hence; but that, if they are read, they will be admired, we have no doubt whatever."—LORD MACAULAY: Edin. Rev., Jan. 1830, 530, (Southey's Colloquies on Society;) and in his Essays.

"Look at Mr. Southey's larger poems, his Kehama, his Thalaba, his Madoc, his Roderick. Who will deny the spirit, the scope, the splendid imagery, the hurried and startling interest that pervades them? Who will say that they are not sustained on fictions wilder than his own Glendoveer; that they are not the daring creations of a mind curbed by no law, tamed by no fear; that they are not rather like the trances than the waking dreams of genius; that they are not the very paradoxes of poetry? All this is very well, very intelligible, and very harmless, if we regard the rank excrescences of Mr. Southey's poetry, like the red and blue flowers in corn, as the unweeded growth of a luxuriant and wandering fancy, or if we allow the yeasty workings of an ardent spirit to ferment and boil over:—the variety, the boldness, the lively stimulus given to the mind may then atone for the violation of rules and the offences to bed-rid authority; but not if our poetic libertine sets up for a lawgiver and judge, or an apprehender of vagrants in the regions either of taste or opinion. Our motley gentleman deserves the strait-waistcoat if he is for setting others in the stocks of servility or condemning them to the pillory for a new mode of rhyme or reason."—WILLIAM HAZLITT: Spirit of the Age: (Mr. Southey.)

See, also, his Lects. on the Eng. Poets, Lect. VII.

"Southey,—who, with all his rich and varied accomplishments, has comparatively but a small portion of Wordsworth's genius, and whose 'wild and wondrous lays' are the very antithesis to Wordsworth's intense musings on humanity and new consecrations of familiar things," &c.—SIR T. NOON TALFOURD: Crit. and Miscell. Writings: (from New Month. Mag.)

"Southey shone in the paths of gentle meditation and philosophic reflection; but his chief strength lay in description, where he had few equals. It was there that he revelled and rioted in the exuberant energy of his spirit,—a devoted worshipper of nature. Akenside describes a landscape as it affects the fancy; Cowper, as it impresses the feelings; Southey daguerreotypes the landscape itself; Coleridge descants on the waving of a leaf; Southey, on its colour and configuration; Wordsworth delights in outflowing sentiment; Southey, in picturesque outline. His capacious mind may be likened to a variegated continent, one region of which is damp with fogs, rough with rocks, barren and unprofitable; the other bright with glorious sunshine, valleys of rich luxuriance, and forests of perpetual verdure."—D. M. MOIR: Sketches of the Poet. Lit., &c., Lect. II.

"I should say that the predominant qualities of his poetry were picturesqueness, sweetness of sentiment, and purity of diction. . . . He is now my favorite. His miscellaneous poems are full of various excellence."—JUDGE J. STORY, 1799: Life and Letters of Story, i. 80.

"Southey's Madoc, Don Roderick, and the Curse of Kehama are splendid metrical histories, but they do not contain the traits which speak at once to all mankind: they are addressed to the learned and studious, and these are a mere fragment of the human race. Admired, accordingly, by the well-informed, they are already comparatively unknown to the great body of readers; and the author's poetical fame rests chiefly on Thalaba, in which his brilliant imagination revelled without control, save that of high moral feeling, in the waterless deserts and palm-shaded fountains and patriarchal life of the Happy Arabia."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Hist. of Europe, 1815–1852, i. ch. v.

SOUTHEY THE PROSE WRITER.

"His prose is perfect. Of his poetry there are various opinions: there is, perhaps, too much for the present generation: posterity will probably select. He has passages equal to any thing. At present he has a party, but no public,—except for his prose writings. The Life of Nelson is beautiful."—LORD BYRON: Journal, Nov. 22, 1813: Moore's Byron, i.

"Mr. Southey's prose style can scarcely be too much praised. It is plain, clear, pointed, familiar, perfectly modern in its texture, but with a grave and sparkling admixture of archaisms in its ornaments and occasional phraseology. He is the best and most natural prose writer of any poet of the day: we mean that he is far better than Lord Byron, Mr. Wordsworth, or Mr. Coleridge, for instance."—WILLIAM HAZLITT: Spirit of the Age: (Mr Southey.)

See, also, his Table-Talk, Essay XXIV., (On the Prose Style of Poets.)

"The most powerful of modern writers."—DR. PHILLPOTTS, Bishop of Exeter: Letter to Southey, Feb. 28, 1825: Southey's Life and Corresp., ch. xxviii.

"Others, again, as Southey and Scott, blessed with a style at once perspicuous and picturesque, seem bent on counteracting these advantages by a rapidity of composition which sets at defiance every thing like arrangement, conciseness, or proportion."—WILLIAM H. PRESCOTT, the historian: N. Amer. Rev., July, 1832, 192, (English Literature of the Nineteenth Century.)

"In vigour and variety of genius Robert Southey has few equals. He ranks in poetry with the foremost; in criticism none can be named more sensible and accurate; in biography he is without rivals; while in history he occupies the first rank, and is on the right hand."—ALLAN CUNNINGHAM: Biog. and Crit. Hist. of the Lit., &c.

"He had not the patience of research and calmness of judgment indispensable for a trustworthy historian. His facts in many places will not bear investigation; he was credulous in the extreme, and gravely retailed statements on the authority of inflamed chronicles which subsequent inquiry disproved and common sense at the moment might at once have discovered to be false."—SIR ARCHIBALD ALISON: Hist. of Europe, 1815–1852, i. ch. v.

The next testimony to be adduced is that of a witness who knew Southey well; and it will be observed that it is highly creditable to the latter, both as an author and as a man:

"Reflect but on the variety and extent of his acquirements: he stands second to no man, either as a historian or as a bibliographer; and when I regard him as a popular essayist (for the articles of his composition in the reviews are for the greater part essays on subjects of deep or curious interest, rather than criticisms on particular works) I look in vain for any writer who has conveyed so much information, from so many and recondite sources, with so many just and original reflections, in a style so lively and poignant, yet so uniformly classical and perspicuous: no one, in short, who has combined so much wisdom with so much wit, so much truth and knowledge with so much life and fancy. His prose is always intelligible, and always entertaining. In poetry he has attempted almost every species of composition known before, and he has added new ones; and, if we except the highest lyric, (in which how few, how very few, even of the greatest minds, have been fortunate!) he has attempted every species successfully. It is Southey's almost unexampled felicity to possess the best gifts of talent and genius, free from all their characteristic defects. As son, brother, husband, father, master, friend, he moves with firm yet light steps, alike unostentatious and alike exemplary. As writer, he has uniformly made his talents subservient to the best interests of humanity, of public virtue, and domestic piety; his cause has ever been the cause of pure religion and of liberty, of national independence and of national illumination."—SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE: Biographia Literaria, ch. iii.

"An English worthy, doing his duty for fifty noble years of labour, day by day storing up learning, day by day working for scant wages, most charitable out of his small means, bravely faithful to the calling which he had chosen, refusing to turn from his path for popular praise or prince's favour;—I mean Robert Southey. We have left his old political landmarks miles and miles behind; we protest against his dogmatism; nay, we begin to forget it and his politics; but I hope his life will not be forgotten, for it is sublime in its simplicity, its energy, its honour, its affection! In the combat between Time and Thalaba, I suspect the former destroyer has conquered; Kehama's curse frightens very few readers now; but Southey's private letters are worth piles of epics, and are sure to last among us as long as kind hearts like to sympathize with goodness and purity and love and upright life."—THACKERAY: George the Third.

We should like to add to this, did our limits permit the gratification, Wordsworth's inscription for a tablet to the memory of Southey, to be placed in the church of Grosthwaite, near Keswick. See, also, Lon. Gent Mag., 1844, 271, 301, (Proposed Monument to Southey.)

A pleasing recognition of the literary services of Southey has occurred within the last few years: in 1861 Lord Palmerston placed on the Civil List for £100 the name of one of the daughters of the poet, historian, biographer, and critic whose long list of contributions to English letters we have thus fully recorded.

"I walked out with Wordsworth. We met with Dr. Arnold. We talked of Southey. Wordsworth spoke of him with great feeling and affection. He said, 'It is painful to see how completely dead Southey is become to all but books. He is amiable and obliging, but when he gets away from his books he seems restless, and as if out of his element. I therefore hardly see him for years together.' Now, all this I had myself observed. Rogers also had noticed it. With Wordsworth it was a subject of sorrow, not of reproach. Dr. Arnold said afterwards, 'What was said of Mr. Southey alarmed me. I could not help saying to myself, "Am I in danger of becoming like him? Shall I ever lose my interest in things, and retain an interest in books only?"' 'If,' said Wordsworth, 'I must lose my interest in one of them, I would rather give up books than men. Indeed, I am by my eyes compelled, in a great measure, to give up reading.' Yet, with all this, Southey was an affectionate husband, and is a fond father. I find that his distaste for London is as strong nearly as his dislike to Paris. He says he does not wish to see it again."—H. C. Robinson's Diary, &c., ed. Bost., 1870, ii. 274.

Southwell, Robert, an English Jesuit, b. 1560; in 1585 was appointed Prefect of the English Jesuits' College in Rome; was subsequently sent to England as a missionary, and, to the disgrace of the English government, suffered as a martyr at Tyburn, Feb. 21, 1595, after three years' imprisonment in the Tower, during which it is asserted he was ten times subjected to the torture. He was a good poet, a good prose writer, and a better Christian than his brutal persecutors. We like to call things by their right names. His poetical works were published under the title of Saint Peter's Complaynt, with other Poems, Lon., 1595, 4to, (2d ed. same year,) and Mæoniæ; or, Certaine excellent Poems and Spirituall Hymnes, &c., 1595, 4to, (of both of these collections and o. his prose works there were many editions before and after 1600:) of his prose tracts, some of which are interspersed with pieces of poetry, the principal are Marie Magdalen's Funerall Teares, 1609, 4to; The Triumphs ouer Death; An Epistle of Comfort; A Consolation to Catholics; and Short Rules of Good Life. For the particulars of the editions (some of which have brought large prices) of his works, we refer to the authorities subjoined. A new edition of Marie Magdalen's Funerall Teares was pub. in 1823, sq. 12mo, (Southern's Antiq. Classics,) and edited by W. Joseph Walter; of The Triumphs ouer Death, 1828, 12mo. The fullest of the old collective editions of his Works was pub. Lon., 1620, 12mo, pp. 566: subsequently other edits. appeared: Doway, 1620, 12mo; Lon., 1630, '34, '36, all 12mo. Mr. W. J. Walter edited St. Peter's Complaint, and other Poems, with Important Additions from an Original MS., and a Sketch of the Author's Life, (1817,) 12mo, 50 copies l. p.; and The Prose Works of Robert Southwell, containing Mary Magdalen's Funeral Tears, the Triumphs over Death, and an Epistle of Comfort, &c., 1828, 12mo. In 1856 appeared Poetical Works of the Rev. Robert Southwell, now first completely Edited by W. B. Turnbull, 1856, fp. 8vo, (J. R. Smith's Lib. of Old Authors.) Sowerby, Charles Edward, 1795–1842, third son of James Sowerby, assisted first his father and afterwards his brother, James De Carle Sowerby, in their natural history publications till 1831, when he commenced the issue of a second edition of Smith and Sowerby's English Botany, on small paper, with additions. See SOWERBY, JOHN EDWARD; SMITH, SIR JAMES EDWARD, M.D., No. 6.

Sowerby, Francis R. See WALKER, JOHN.

Sowerby, George Brettingham, a native of Lambeth, 1788–1854, was the second son of James Sowerby, (infra.) 1. The Genera of Recent and Fossil Shells, Lon., 1822–34, 42 8vo Pts.; 264 coloured plates. Incomplete. The drawings and engravings were by his father and brother, James De Carle Sowerby. 2. Catalogue of the Shells contained in the Collection of the Late Earl of Tankerville, 1825, 8vo. Mr. Sowerby purchased this collection of shells for £6000. He bought several other large collections. 3. Species Conchyliorum, 1830, r. 4to; l. p., fol.; 14 coloured plates. Not continued. 4. Conchological Illustrations, 1832–45, 200 8vo Pts. Earlier Pts. re-dated, 1841. 5. Thesaurus Conchyliorum; or, Figures and Descriptions of Shells, 1842–64, 23 imp. 8vo Pts. The latter volumes by George Brettingham Sowerby, Jr. A list of his papers, over 40 in number, in the Zoological Journal, (of which he was one of the founders, and which was pub. 1825–35,) Proceed. Zoolog. Soc., Mag. of Nat. Hist., and Reports of Brit. Assoc., will be found in Agassiz's and Strickland's Bibl. of Zoolog. He was also a contributor to Trans. Linn. Soc. See Lon. Gent. Mag., 1854, ii. 406; Lon. Athen., 1854, 971.

Sowerby, George Brettingham, Jr., b. 1812, son of the preceding, as a naturalist and natural history engraver, helps to maintain and extend the reputation of his family. He continued the Thesaurus Conchyliorum of his father, (q. v.;) has published many papers on shells in the Proceedings of the Zoological Society; drew the shells of each species for Lovell Reeve's British Land and Freshwater Conchology, (see, also, THORPE, CHARLES; WOOD, JOHN GEORGE, Nos. 4, 7, 20;) and is the author of the following useful works. 1. Conchological Manual, Lon., 1839, 8vo, 25*s.*; coloured, 45*s.*; 2d ed., 1842; 3d ed., 1846; 4th ed., 1852. Commended by Swainson, &c. 2. Spalding, John, Clerk to the Commissary of Aberdeen, 1624–45, was the author of The History of the Troubles and Memorable Transactions in Scotland and England from 1624 to 1645. An abstract from this MS. —The History of the Troubles, &c. in Scotland, 1624–45—was first pub. Aberd., 1792, 2 vols. 12mo; again, 1829, (some 1830,) 8vo: the whole work was printed by the Bannatyne Club, (No. XXVI.,) edited by James Skene, Edin., 1828, 2 vols. 4to; and by the Maitland Club, (No. XX.,) 1828–30, 2 vols. 4to: 100 copies. For the family, ecclesiastical, and political history of the period, this work is invaluable. Nor must the antiquary fail to supplement it by the publications of the Spalding Club, (named after this author and instituted in 1839,) of which 32 vols. were issued 1841–63. Sparks, Jared, LL.D., b. about 1794, at Willington, Connecticut, in early life and under discouraging circumstances evinced that love of study and aptness in the acquisition of knowledge which in later years produced fruits truly honourable to himself and eminently beneficial to the world.

"On a late visit to Mansfield, Connecticut," remarks a traveller, "we formed a pleasant acquaintance with an old gentleman named Holt, formerly a school-teacher, who numbered among his pupils no less a personage than Jared Sparks, the distinguished biographer and historian. Mr. Holt related to us a number of anecdotes and incidents of 'Jared,' as he termed his honoured pupil. He said 'Jared was an uncommonly fine boy,' and would learn more in one week than his other scholars would learn in three or four weeks. 'One night,' said he, 'at the dismissal of the school, I told Jared to remain with me after the others had gone. He did so, and, looking up to me with an inquiring glance, said, 'Master, what have I done?' 'Done? too much for me!' said the school-master. At this Jared became embarrassed, and begged an explanation. The good man then told him that he was getting too learned for his master, and recommended him to enter a higher institution. But the youth did not consent, and begged to remain a while longer."

Referring, for the particulars of his enterprising and successful career, to the authority to which we are indebted for the preceding anecdote, (National Portrait-Gallery of Distinguished Americans, edit. 1854,) we present a brief biographical summary by stating that, after surmounting no ordinary difficulties, he graduated at Harvard College in 1815, subsequently taught for one year a private classical school at Lancaster, Massachusetts, and then returned to Harvard, to study divinity chiefly under the instruction of the Rev. Dr. Ware, at that time Hollis Professor; acted as editor of the North American Review, May, 1817, to March, 1818, inclusive; was ordained pastor of a new Unitarian church at Baltimore, Maryland, May, 1819, (see CHANNING, WILLIAM ELLERY, D.D.,) and resigned this post in consequence of failure of health, April, 1823; Chaplain to the House of Representatives at Washington, 1821; was the originator and chief writer of the Unitarian Miscellany and Christian Monitor, published by him at Baltimore for two years, (1821–23,) and afterwards continued for two more by Dr. F. W. P. Greenwood; sole proprietor and editor of the North American Review, January, 1824, to April, 1830, inclusive; McLean Professor of Ancient and Modern History at Harvard, 1838 to 1849, and President of the College. 1849 to February, 1853, when he resigned on account of ill health. The Corporation received "with great regret the letter of resignation," assuring him of their conviction "that the present prosperous condition of the college is, to a large extent, the result of the high tone of your influence and example, of the wisdom of the measures you have devised, and the extent of the reputation your character and attainments have secured." Testimonials of the same gratifying character were also received from the Faculty, being the board of immediate instruction and discipline, and the Faculty of the Law School.

After his resignation Dr. Sparks resided in retirement at Cambridge, devoting his studious hours to the preparation of A History of the American Revolution, to obtain original materials for which he visited Europe in 1858. This he did not live to see published: he died at Cambridge, March 14, 1866. Chronological list of his publications: 1. Letters on the Ministry, Ritual, and Doctrines of the Protestant Episcopal Church; addressed to the Rev. William E. Wyatt, D.D., in reply to a Sermon, Balt., 1820, 8vo; 2d ed., Bost., 1844, 12mo. Dr. Wyatt's Sermon was preached and published early in 1820. See PALFREY, JOHN GORHAM, D.D., No. 1; Brownson's Quar. Rev., i. 386; Chris. Disc., ii. 287. 2. Sermon preached in the Hall of the House of Representatives, March 3, 1822, on the Death of William Pinkney, Washington, 1822, 8vo, pp. 15; 2d ed., 1822. See, also, Chris. Disciple, iv. 139. 3. An Inquiry into the Comparative Moral Tendency of the Trinitarian and Unitarian Doctrines, in a Series of Letters to the Rev. Dr. Miller, of Princeton, Bost., 1823, 8vo. Enlarged from the originals in The Unitarian Miscellany.

"Dr. Miller had published a sermon at Baltimore, which contained some remarks on Unitarians, that were thought to be unreasonably severe and unjust. Mr. Sparks made some strictures on the sermon; Dr. Miller replied; and out of the controversy sprang these Letters, the most elaborate and thoughtful of the writer's theological productions."—National Portrait-Gallery, ut supra.

7. The Diplomatic Correspondence of the American Revolution; being the Letters of Benjamin Franklin, Silas Deane, John Adams, John Jay, Arthur Lee, William Lee, Ralph Izard, Francis Dana, William Carmichael, Henry Laurens, John Laurens, M. Dumas, and others, concerning the Foreign Relations of the United States during the whole Revolution; together with the Letters in reply from the Secret Committee of Congress, and the Secretary of Foreign Affairs; also the entire Correspondence of the French Ministers Gerard and Luzerne with Congress: Published, under the Direction of the President of the United States, from the Original Manuscripts in the Department of State, conformably to a Resolution of Congress of March 27, 1818, Bost., 1829–30, 12 vols. 8vo; re-dated, 1854.

"This is a work of great importance for the history of the Revolution. It is a store-house of new materials. . . . No library of American history can dispense with it; no American statesman can creditably remain ignorant of its contents. It is a great and important work, long called for and wanted, and at last ably prepared for the public."—EDWARD EVERETT: N. Amer. Rev., Oct. 1831, 449–84.

8. The American Almanac and Repository of Useful Knowledge: vol. i., 1830, 12mo. 10. The Writings of George Washington; being his Correspondence, Addresses, Messages, and other Papers, Official and Private, selected and published from the Original Manuscripts; with a Life of the Author, Notes, and Illustrations, 1834–37, 12 vols. 8vo; l. p., imp. 8vo; re-dated, 1842, &c.

Vol. i., which contains the Life of Washington, was published (with vol. xii.) in 1837; reissued, for separate sale, 1839, '53, '54, '55. There is also an abridgment by the author in 1843, 2 vols. 12mo. Of vol. ii. of the Writings, the stereotype plates were sent to London, and an edition was issued there;

"but it met with no encouragement, and was in consequence abandoned, the price being returned to the purchasers, and the copies on hand, to use a publishers' term, wasted,—that is, mutilated and sold for waste-paper."—RICH: Bibl. Amer. Nova, ii. 259.

Mr. Colburn, of London, published in 1839, (re-dated 1842,) 2 vols. 8vo, what he called Personal Memoirs and Diaries of George Washington, Commander-in-Chief of the American Armies, and First President of the United States, by Jared Sparks. This was done without the consent, or even the knowledge, of Dr. Sparks,

(see Lon. Month. Rev., Jan. 1839; N. Amer. Rev., July, 1842, 252, by J. G. Palfrey.) A French abridgment of the 12 vols. was published under the supervision of M. Guizot, as follows: Vie, Correspondance et Ecrits de Washington, publiés d'après l'Edition Américaine, et précédés d'une Introduction sur l'Influence et le Caractère de Washington dans la Révolution des Etats-Unis de l'Amérique; par M. Guizot, Membre de l'Institut, Paris, 1839–40, 6 vols. 8vo, and atlas in 4to. These volumes contain "a complete and literal translation of the Life of Washington, and those parts of the Correspondence which were deemed by M. Guizot most important and interesting to the French public." (See the review of them, by Edward Everett, in N. Amer. Rev., July, 1840, 69–91; and Dubl. Univ. Mag., xvii. 295.) Vie du Général Washington, par M. Guizot, was pub. separately, Paris, 1839, 8vo. See Reeve, Henry, No. 2. A German version of the Life of Washington, and of extracts from the Writings, by Frederick von Raumer, was pub. at Leipsic, 1839, 2 vols. 8vo. Gaz., 1852, 551; Ticknor's Life of Prescott, 1864, 355;) Marshall, John, LL.D., p. 1227. On the controversy with Lord Mahon it will be seen that we are sufficiently full. We are tempted, however, to extract from our memoranda of our conversations with Washington Irving a few lines on this question:

Irving.—"Marshall and Sparks are very accurate. Whoever will read the Life by Marshall and Correspondence [Writings] by Sparks will have a good idea of Washington."

Allusion was made to the omissions and alterations in letters of Washington printed by Mr. Reed.

Irving.—"I have examined them carefully, and found no important changes. [See, to the same effect, Irving's Preface to his Life of Washington, written several years after this conversation.] The phraseology is slightly altered in some cases, and in one instance, I remember, I thought it was a great pity. Washington says, 'I will have nothing to do with such a dirty fellow;' which exactly expresses his opinion of the man. 'Dirty fellow' ought not to have been left out. People make a great mistake in representing Washington as flying into violent passions, and using such language as they repeat."—At Sunnyside, June 12, 1855.

See, also, Life and Letters of Irving, ii. 335, iv. 130, 146.

Candour compels us to admit that we should have retained every "dirty fellow" we found, even in such goodly company. The duties of the transcriber and of the glossologist appear to us to be entirely distinct: if they are to be confounded at will, all assurance is at an end, save to those who can examine original records.

We are not willing to conclude our notice of this most important publication without the quotation of a few lines from one of the eminent critics whose reviews of the Writings of Washington we have just cited:

"His reward has been already in part enjoyed; it must be found in the consciousness of laboriously and worthily performing a noble work,—in the conviction that he has contributed to give a wider diffusion and a more abiding permanence to the fame of Washington; and that, whenever the authority of the greatest and best of chieftains and patriots is appealed to in all coming time, it will be in some association with his own name and labours."—Edward Everett: N. Amer. Rev., xlvii. 381, (Oct. 1838.)

11. The Library of American Biography, Bost., 1834–38, (26 Lives,) 10 vols. 12mo; Second Series, 1844–47, (34 Lives,) 15 vols. 12mo. Some of the volumes, as also some of the sets, were re-dated from time to time. Of the sets before us, the date of the First Series is 1854; of the Second Series, 1848, (some sets of Second Series bear date 1852.) The sale of all the volumes to 1853 was stated to be 100,000. New editions, N. York and Bost., 1864, 25 vols. 12mo. Of the 60 lives the following are from the pen of the editor of the whole work, Dr. Sparks: I. Ethan Allen; II. Benedict Arnold; III. Father Marquette; IV. De la Salle; V. Count Pulaski; VI. John Ribault; VII. Charles Lee; VIII. John Ledyard: (see No. 6.)

Notices of several of the volumes appeared in the N. Amer. Rev. as follows: of vol. i., xxxviii. 132, (G. Bancroft,) 466, (by O. W. B. Peabody: see, also, Lon. Month Rev., July, 1834, 395;) of vols. v., vi., xliii. 267, 516, (by J. G. Palfrey;) of vol. x., xlviii. 63, (by J. H. Perkins;) of vol. xi., lix. 96, (by O. W. B. Peabody;) of vol. xiii., lx. 246; of vol. xxi., lxiv. 217, (by Francis Bowen.) From this last learned authority we extract a few lines:

"Mr. Sparks's Library of American Biography, now extending to twenty-one volumes, is about the largest, as it is certainly one of the most valuable, of the collateral aids for the study of American history which have yet been published."

"It is to be regretted," justly remarks another excellent critic, "that the admirable series of American Biographies carried on so far and so well by Dr. Sparks was suspended."—Henry T Tuckerman, Oct. 1, 1859.

"A new edition of Franklin's works in a French translation, with which M. Laboulaye has been busied for some time, is nearly ready for the press. It is mainly based on Sparks's collection of B. There has recently appeared: The Autobiography of Dr. Benjamin Franklin: The First and Only Complete Edition of Franklin's Memoirs; Printed from the Original MS., with Notes and an Introduction; Edited by the Hon. John Bigelow, late Minister of the United States to France, (with an engraving from the pastel portrait by Duplessis, in Mr. Bigelow's possession,) Phila., Lippincott, 1868, 8vo; l. p., 100 copies, r. 8vo. In Italian, by Signor Pietro Rotondo, Firenze, 1869.

"It is well known that Franklin prepared so much of the celebrated Memoirs of his life as was originally intended for publication, mainly at the solicitation of one of his most cherished friends in France,—M. Le Veillard, then Mayor of Passy. Toward the close of the year 1789 he presented to this gentleman a copy of all this sketch that was then finished. At the Doctor's death, his papers, including the original of the manuscript, passed into the hands of one of his grandsons, William Temple Franklin, who undertook to prepare an edition of the life and writings of his grandfather for a publishing house in London.

"For the greater convenience of the printer in the preparation of this edition,—so goes the tradition in the Veillard family,—William Temple Franklin exchanged the original autograph with Mrs. Le Veillard, then a widow, for her copy of the Memoirs, and thus the autograph passed out of the Franklin family.

"At the death of the widow Le Veillard, this manuscript passed to her daughter; and at her death, in 1834, it became the property of her cousin, M. de Senarmont, whose grandson, M. P. de Senarmont, transferred it to me on the 26th of January, 1867, with several other memorials of Franklin, which had descended to him with the manuscript. Among the latter were the famous pastel portrait of Franklin by Duplessis, which he presented to M. Le Veillard; a number of letters to M. Le Veillard from Dr. Franklin, and from his grandsons, William Temple Franklin, and Benjamin Franklin Bache; together with a minute Outline of the topics of his Memoirs, brought down to the termination of his mission to France.

"I availed myself of my earliest leisure to subject the Memoirs to a careful collation with the edition which had appeared in London in 1817, and which was the first and only edition that ever purported to have been printed from the manuscript. The results of this collation revealed the curious fact that more than twelve hundred separate and distinct changes had been made in the text, and, what is more remarkable, that the last eight pages of the manuscript, which are second in value to no other eight pages of the work, were omitted entirely."—Introduction.

In October, 1869, the Trustees of the Boston Public Library announced their intention to form a special collection of the works of and relating to Franklin, large or small, printed or in MS.; also magazines, portraits, drawn, engraved, printed, or painted, broadsides, or any thing else, relating personally to the American sage. A very excellent design.

13. Remarks on American History, Bost., 1837, 8vo.
14. Illustrations of the Principal Events in the Life of Washington; Edited by Jared Sparks, r. 4to: No. 1, 1843.

"To be completed in twelve numbers, each embellished with four highly finished engravings, from original paintings by the most eminent American artists."—Rich's Bibl. Amer. Nova, ii. 375, year 1844.

"Some difficulty in procuring the engravings prevented the execution of his [the publisher's] plan. It was to be in 12 Nos. The first number only was published."—Jared Sparks to S. Austin Allibone, June 10, 1862.

15. Correspondence of the American Revolution; being Letters of Eminent Men to George Washington from the Time of his taking Command of the Army to the End of his Presidency; Edited from the Original Manuscripts, 1853, 8vo; l. p., r. 8vo. These volumes contain a selection of about 1000 letters (from about 190 writers) from several thousands not used in the Notes and Appendix to the Writings of Washington, (No. 10, supra.) Of course the two collections must stand side by side on the shelf of the American historical library; and such should be in every American family at least. A review of No. 15 will be found in N. Amer. Rev., July, 1853, 80–105. The critic (J. G. Palfrey) assures us that "The volumes are prepared with the good judgment, good taste, and careful illustration which the public looks for in whatever passes through the hands of Mr. Sparks."

Dr. Sparks also edited Professor Smyth's Lectures on Modern History, (see SMYTH, WILLIAM, No. 2,) and contributed (1817–62) fifty-two articles to the North American Review.

It would be easy to adduce further testimonies to the value of his publications and the diligence and intelligence of their author or editor; but for this purpose enough has been already quoted or cited. We add to our authorities: Griswold's Prose Writers of America; Bancroft's Hist. of U. States; Edward Everett's Orations, Index; Willard's Memories; D. Webster's Works, i., Pref., vii.; D. Webster's Private Corresp., ii. 190, (letter from Lord Ashburton;) R. C. Winthrop's Addresses, 1852, 422; Lon. Quar. Rev., lxxi. 579; Trübner's Bibl. Guide to Amer. Lit., 1859, iii.; Blackw. Mag., xvii. 201, and xviii. 334, (both by John Neal;) Lon. Athen., 1835, 818, (by Timothy Flint;) Hist. Mag., 1858, 271, 288; BANCROFT, GEORGE, p. 110, (quotation from Frederick von Raumer.)

"One whom I consider among the greatest benefactors to our national literature."—WASHINGTON IRVING: Life of George Washington, Preface.

"The accurate and philosophical research of Sparks."—EDWARD EVERETT: Orations, iii. 1858, 5.

"Mr. Sparks, whom we regard as an extremely well-informed and fair writer. . . . An expert in manuscripts, . . . one of those diligent collators and investigators whom nothing would escape, . . . a discriminating, candid, and singularly fair man."—DR. H. S. RANDALL: Life of Thomas Jefferson, i. 318, ii. 370.

"The subject, it is understood, is to engage the attention, also, of Mr. Sparks, whose honourable labours have already associated his name imperishably with our Revolutionary period."—WILLIAM H. PRESCOTT: N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1841, 102, (and in his Miscellanies, ed. 1855, 339:) Bancroft's United States.

Among other distinctions elicited by Dr. Sparks's services to literature was the election in 1860, at Copenhagen, the King of Denmark presiding, to a Foundation Fellowship in the Royal Society of Northern Antiquaries. See, also, Proceed. Mass. Hist. Soc., April 3, 1866, and May, 1868, (last published in a volume,—Memoirs of Jared Sparks, LL.D., by the Rev. George E. Spearman, Robert, of Oldacres, Northumberland, has been already referred to in our notice of his theological master: see HUTCHINSON, JOHN. Of his own he published: 1. An Enquiry after Philosophy and Theology, Edin., 1755, (some 1756,) 8vo; 2d ed., Dubl., 1757, 8vo. 2. Letters to a Friend concerning the Septuagint Translation and the Heathen Mythology, Edin., 1759, 8vo.

"Both these works contain a respectable portion of genius and learning, but are strongly tinctured with the principles and spirit of the school to which the author belonged. Spearman's opinion of the Septuagint was low and incorrect; but he has some sensible remarks on the quotations from it in the New Testament. He considers all the mythology of the heathen to have been originally derived from Revelation."—Orme's Bibl. Bib., 416.

The Philosophical Works were edited by Ellis and Spedding, the Literary Works by Spedding, and the Professional Works by Heath. These gentlemen have been engaged on this great undertaking since 1847. Notices of vol. i. will be found in Athen., 1857, 8vo, 215; Sat. Rev., 1857; and Examiner, 1857, (same art. in Liv. Age, lii. 673;) of vols. i., ii., and iii., in Edin. Rev., Oct. 1857; of vols. i.–v., in Athen., 1858, ii. 332, 367, 487; of vol. vii., in Athen., 1860, i. 9, 44, 88, 126, (by William Hepworth Dixon, vide infra:) see, also, 825, 854. These 7 vols. were published at £6 2*s*. They were reissued by Brown & Taggard, of Boston, in 1861–64, in 15 vols. cr. 8vo, at $22.50; l. p., 100 copies, $45. See notices in N. Amer. The third division of this noble edition of Bacon's Works, entitled The Letters and Life of Lord Bacon, including all his Occasional Works, &c., Newly Corrected and Set Out in Chronological Order: with a Commentary, Biographical and Historical, by James Spedding, Lon., vols. i.–v., 1870. See Lon. Athen., 1862, ii. 74, and Blackw. Mag., April, 1863. Referring to Mr. Dixon's papers in the Athenæum, ut supra, in which Bacon's character is defended against many of his biographers, we should not fail to chronicle the fact that he has since published Personal History of Lord Bacon, from Unpublished Papers, Lon. and Bost., 1861, fp. 8vo; in French, by Louis Blanc, Paris, 1861. See, also, Athen., 1861, i. 696; 1862, i. 553, 661; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1861, ii. 143; Proceed. Mass. Hist. Soc., 1860–62, 164; Lon. Reader, 1865, i. 535.

This was followed by the Life and Correspondence of Lord Bacon: an Answer to Mr. Hepworth Dixon's "Personal History of Lord Bacon;" by a Member of the Middle Temple, Lon., 1861, 8vo. To this succeeded The Story of Lord Bacon's Life, by W. Hepworth Dixon, 1862, 12mo. See Athen., 1861, ii. 448. Nor must we omit to notice the edition of the Novum Organum by J. S. Speke, John Hanning, the African explorer, second son of William Speke, Esq., of Jordans, Somerset, was b. 1827; entered the Royal Army, 1844; served in the Crimea, and subsequently accompanied Capt. R. F. Burton (q. v.) in an African expedition, the results of which are related in Burton's Lake Regions of Central Africa, Lon., 1860, 2 vols. 8vo; N. York, 1860, 8vo. See, also, Burton's First Footsteps in East Africa, Lon., 1856, 8vo. Of his later African explorations he gave accounts in Blackwood's Magazine, Sept., Oct., Nov., 1859, May, June, July, 1860, (see N. Amer. Rev., April, 1861,) and in the following volumes: 1. Journal of the Discovery of the Source of the Nile, Edin. and Lon., 1863, 8vo; N. York, 1864, 8vo. In French, by E. D. Forgues, Paris, 1864. See Lon. Quar. Rev., Jan. and April, 1864, N. Amer. Rev., Jan. 1867, Blackw. Mag., Lon. Athen., Lon. Review, &c. 2. What Led to the Discovery of the Source of the Nile, Edin., 1864, 8vo. See Lon. Reader, 1864, ii. 125. 3. Report on a Zoological Collection for the Somali Country, by Edward Blyth, &c.; with Additions and Corrections by the Collector, Captain J. H. Speke, 8vo, pp. 16. He received a gold medal from the Royal Geographical Society of France in 1860, one from the Royal Geographical Society of Great Britain in 1861, and another from the King of Italy. Captain Speke was to have been welcomed by the British Association at Bath, Sept. 16, 1864, but accidentally shot himself the day before, whilst engaged in field-sports, See Blackw. Mag., Aug. 1863, and Oct. 1864; New Mon. Mag., Nov. 1864, and Lon. Reader, 1864, ii. 383, 384; Amer. Ann. Cyc., 1864, 756; also, Lon. Times, June 18, 1863, and Sept. 19 et seq., 1864; Lon. "The man who of all Europeans first crossed Central Equatorial Africa from south to north, with his companion Grant, and also (setting aside all disputes respecting the source of the Nile) unquestionably determined the existence and position of the great water-basin whence the Nile flows."—Sir R. I. Murchison: quoted in Lon. Reader, Oct. 1, 1864, 415.

"You will, however, perceive that, in recounting the last brilliant episode of Captain Speke's brief but useful and eventful life, the discovery of the Nile Sources can hardly be called a thing settled in all future time."—Richard F. Burton, Sept. 21, 1864: in Lon. Times.

Those who are interested in African explorations must add to Speke's books the following volumes: I. Missionary Journals and Researches in South Africa, by D. Livingstone, D.D., 1857, 8vo; II. Travels in North and Central Africa, by H. Barth, Ph.D., 1857–58, 5 vols. 8vo; (Dr. Barth, b. at Hamburg, 1821, d. 1865;) III. The Sources of the Nile, by C. T. Beke, Ph.D., 1860, 8vo; IV. Explorations and Adventures in Equatorial Africa, by P. Du Chaillu, 1861, 8vo; N. York, 1861, 8vo; V. The Nile—Who Discovered the Source of the Nile? by C. T. Beke, Ph.D., Lon., 1863, 8vo; VI. Spelman, Sir Henry, Knt., an eminent antiquary, b. 1562, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge; in his 18th year was entered of Lincoln's Inn, and under great discouragements (see the Preface to his Glossarium) devoted some time to the study of the law; when almost of age, returned to Norfolk, of which county he was in 1604 High Sheriff; was employed in public business in Ireland and at home by King James, who made him a knight; in 1612 settled in London for the purpose of pursuing his learned researches; and d., after an honourable and studious life, in 1641. Ample particulars of his literary career will be found in the authorities subjoined. 1. De non Temerandis Ecclesiis, [Churches not to be Violated;] of the Rights and Respects due to Churches; with his [Latin] Epistle to Sir R. Carew concerning Tithes, Lon., 1613, 1616, 12mo; Edin., 1616, 8vo; Oxford, 1646, 4to; 1668, 12mo; 1670; Lon., 1704, 8vo; 1841, 18mo. Printed also with Royve's Poor Vicar's Plea. See SPELMAN, CLEMENT. An Apology of the Treatise De non, &c. was published in 1646. 2. Glossarium Archaiologicum continens Latina-barbara, peregrina, obsoleta et novatæ significationis Vocabulæ; quæ post labefactatas a Gothis, Vandalisque res Europæas in Scriptoribus, Chartis et Formulis occurrunt, 1687, fol.; some l. p. Only edition of the complete work. The first part (A–L, inclusive) was pub. by Sir Henry in 1626, fol., (he printed a specimen in 1621;) the remainder (much inferior to part first) was completed from his undigested MS., after his death, by his son, Sir John Spelman, (infra,) and William Dugdale, (chiefly by the latter,) under whose supervision it was pub. in 1664, fol. It was the second book reviewed in De Sallo's Journal des Sçavans, (No. 1, Jan. 5, 1665.) See WATTS, WILLIAM. The value of this great work is well known to philologists.

Remains of the Ancient Artists, &c.; in Ten Books, 1747, r. fol.; 2d ed., 1755, fol.; 3d ed., 1774, fol. In the first ed. only is the caricature portrait of Dr. Cooke, for which in the 2d and 3d eds. is substituted a figure of Hermes. The plates in first ed. are the best impression. Of these plates there are 41, (engraved by Boitard;) there is also a fine portrait by Vertue. An abridgment was published by Nicholas Tindall, (q. v.,) 1768, 8vo: many editions. Spence is said to have cleared £1500 by his Polymetis.

Spence's idea is a good one, and could now, by a careful digest of the results of late classical researches, be carried out to much greater advantage.

3. Plain Matter of Fact; or, A Short Review of the Reigns of our Popish Princes since the Reformation, &c.; Pt. 1, 1748, 12mo. Ascribed to Spence. 4. Crito; or, A Dialogue on Beauty, by Sir Harry Beaumont, (a pseudonym: see No. 6,) 1752, 8vo. 5. A Particular Account of the Emperor of China's Gardens near Pekin, &c., 1752, 8vo. This and No. 4 were reprinted in Dodsley's Fugitive Pieces. 6. Moralities, by Sir Harry Beaumont, (see No. 4,) 1753, 8vo. 7. Account of Mr. Blacklock, 1754, 8vo: see BLACKLOCK, THOMAS; Lon. Gent. Mag., 1754, 500. 8. A Parallel, in the Manner of Plutarch, between a Most Celebrated Man of Florence [Magliabecchi] and One [Robert Hill, q. v., p. 847, supra] scarce ever heard of in England, Strawberry Hill, 1758, sm. 8vo; Lon., 1759, sm. 8vo. Reprinted in Dodsley's Collec. of Fugitive Pieces, (first ed., 1761,) vol. ii. See Lon. Month. Rev., 1759, i. 217. 9. Remarks and Dissertations on Virgil; with some other Classical Observations, by the Late Mr. Holdsworth, [see HOLDSWORTH, EDWARD;] published, with several Notes and additional Remarks, by Mr. Spence, 1768, 4to. In 1730 he published a pamphlet on Stephen Duck, (q. v.;) in 1736, at the request of Pope, he republished, with a Preface, Sackville's tragedy of Gorboduc, 8vo; and he contributed to Dodsley's Museum, Oxford Verses, Dodsley's Collection of Poems, (see, also, Nichols's Select Collection of Poems,) and Phil. Trans., xlviii. 486, (Antiquities at Herculaneum.) He left a valuable MS. collection of Anecdotes, (presented by his executors to the Duke of Newcastle,) which in his lifetime had been used by Dr. Joseph Warton in his edition of Pope, was subsequently laid under contribution by Dr. Johnson in his Lives of the Poets, and by other biographers, but was carefully kept from the public eye for nearly fifty-two years, when appeared—10. Observations, Anecdotes, and Characters of Books and Men, arranged, with Notes, by the Late Edmund Malone, Esq., 1820, cr. 8vo; and another edition on the same day: Anecdotes, Observations, and Characters of Books and Men; collected from the Conversation of Mr. Pope, and other Eminent Persons of his Time, by the Rev. Joseph Spence; now first Published from the Original Papers; with Notes, and a Life of the Author, by Samuel Weller Singer, 1820, cr. 8vo; l. p., for illustration, fol., 50 copies; 2d ed., 1858, fp. 8vo; l. p., p. 8vo, (J. R. Smith's Lib. of Old Eng. Authors.) For notices of these editions of the Malone Manuscript and of the Newcastle Manuscript, see Lon. Quar. Rev., July, 1820, 400, (by J. W. Croker;) Lon. Month. Rev., 1820, i. 245; and Lon. Athen., 1859, i. 249. Malone's edition contains only a selection; Singer's is called the authentic edition of the original; and his 2d edition is "reprinted verbatim from his former edition," (see his Preface to ed. of 1859;) but, remarks the critic of the Athenæum, after a notice of some of the unremoved difficulties of his text,

"Enough has been proved to show that, instead of a 'verbatim' reprint, what was wanted was a carefully revised, collated, and annotated edition, and that Mr. Singer's, neat and cheap, unhappily 'stops the way.'"

See, also, Lon. Critic, 1859; a review of Singer's edition in Edin. Rev., May, 1820, 302, (by William Hazlitt;) an article in H. B. Wallace's Literary Criticisms, 1856, 134–38; Dibdin's Lib. Comp., ed. 1825, 567; Croker's Boswell's Johnson, chaps. lxx., lxxi.; POPE, ALEXANDER. In his Tales of the Genii (see Bohn's Lowndes, 2570) the Rev. James Ridley introduces Spence as The Dervise of the Groves, Phesoj Enceps: not a hopelessly obscure anagram. In addition to Singer's Life of Spence, consult Bowles's Pope's Works; Nichols's Lit. Anec., vii. 390, 679, (Index;) Lon. Gent. Mag., 1819, ii. 412.

"At Captain McLean's I mentioned Pope's friend, Spence. . . . 'A good scholar, Sir?' JOHNSON.—'Why, no, Sir.' BOSWELL.—'He was a pretty scholar.' JOHNSON.—'You have about reached him.'"—Boswell's Johnson, year 1773.

"As I knew Mr. Joseph Spence, I do not think I should have been so much delighted as Dr. Kippis with reading his letters. He was a good-natured, harmless little soul, but more like a silver penny than a genius. It was a neat, fiddle-faddle bit of sterling, that had read good books and kept good company, but was too trifling for use, and only fit to please a child."—*Horace Walpole to Rev. W. Linn. Soc., Mag. Nat. Hist., &c., (see Eng. Cyc., v., 1857, 630,) was the author of the following pamphlets: 1. Britain Independent of Commerce, &c., Lon., 1807, 8vo; 3d ed., 1807. Severely censured by McCulloch, (Lit. of Polit. Econ., 1845, 56.) It elicited answers from Colonel Torrens, 1808, 8vo, Mill, (see MILL, JAMES, No. 4,) and others. Blackw. Mag., xxiii. 872, decided that Spence was "just as right in the main" as Mill, and a much better writer. 2. "To the Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette, [1866:]

"SIR: The paragraph which you lately published, on the authority of the American papers, 'that Prof. Youmans recently left that country in order to present to Mr. Herbert Spencer $5000 and a very valuable gold watch as a testimonial from his American admirers,' requires some correction, as it misstates both the amount contributed and my own purpose in coming to this country. The case is this. Nearly all Mr. Spencer's writings have been republished in America, where they have been both widely read and very highly appreciated.

"Many of his friends there, feeling a deep indebtedness to him for works by which they knew he had been the loser to a serious amount, thought that they could not more suitably express their gratitude than by a substantial testimonial. But knowing that Mr. Spencer had decisively declined some overtures on the part of his friends in England, having the kindred purpose of preventing the cessation of his philosophical series, and preferring not to be placed in a like predicament, they invested 7000 dollars in his name in public securities, which, as they belong to no one else, he is of course at liberty either to appropriate or leave to accumulate for the benefit of his heirs.

"E. L. YOUMANS."

Spencer, Ichabod Smith, D.D., b. at Rupert, Vermont, 1798; graduated at Union College, 1822; was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Geneva, 1826; was pastor of the Congregational church at Northampton, Mass., 1828–31; and pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, L.I., from 1832 until his death, Nov. 23, 1854. He published nine single sermons, 1835–50, and the following well-known work: 1. A Pastor's Sketches, N. York, 1850, 12mo; 5th ed., 1851, 12mo; Second Series, 1853, 12mo. Editio optima. The 4th Book, left in MS. by the author, was first pub. in this edition. The 1st edition of the work was pub. Cantab., 1685, fol.; repub. Hag. Com., 1686, 4to; Lips., 1705, 4to. A foreign edition of the four Books—præmittitur C. M. Pfaffi Dissertatio de Vita Spenceri, de Libri Pretio et Erroribus, &c.—was pub. Tübing., 1732, 2 vols. in 1, fol. Extracts will be found in Ugolinus.

"This admirable book, though it is confined to an illustration of the Ritual Law, yet it is by far the most considerable attempt yet made to explain the nature and genius of the Mosaic religion. It is of infinite use, not only for its appropriate excellence, but for the subjects, necessarily leading him to a very detailed account of the Ancient Pagan World, without which knowledge we can have but a very imperfect idea of the Jewish Law and History."—BISHOP WARBURTON.

Warburton defended Spencer against Witsius; for which Archbishop Magee, in his work on the Atonement, takes Warburton to task.

"It [Spencer De Legibus, &c.] is a very learned but a very dangerous work; the great object of which is to show that the Hebrew ritual was almost entirely borrowed from the Egyptians, and accommodated to the taste and prejudices which the Jews had acquired among that people. The same hypothesis had been stated by Maimonides, a philosophizing Jew, in his More Nerochim, and was greedily laid hold of by Sir John Marsham in his Canon Chronicos Aegyptiacus. A masterly refutation of the work of Spencer was furnished by Witsius, in his Aegyptiaca; and Shuckford, in his Connections, supplies also many arguments on the same side."—ORME: Bibl. Bib., 417.

Dr. Woodward, in his Discourse on the Worship of the Egyptians, (see WOODWARD, JOHN, M.D., No. 8,) and William Jones of Nayland, in his Considerations of the Religious Worship of the Heathens, 1799, (see Jones's Works, xii.,) also attack Spencer; on whose behalf, on the other side, it has been alleged that "his chief purpose was to prove in detail that the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish religion were instituted in direct opposition to the practices of the surrounding idolatrous nations, and in order to establish the strongest distinction between the Jews and them." Sir John Marsham, it will be remembered, (p. 1229, supra,) was attacked and defended on the same grounds.

"He [Spencer] preposterously deduced the rites of the Hebrews from the rites of the Heathens, and so produced a work of learned appearance and composed in elegant Latin, but disgraceful to Christian Divinity, dishonorable to the Church of England, and affording a very bad example to vain scholars who should succeed him."—JONES OF NAYLAND, ut supra.

If we were numbered among her ladyship's "countrymen," we might say that we would not repeat the story of Spenser's having recited memoriter the whole contents of a newspaper; but, having repeated it, we add that we never believed it. "Newspaper" is indefinite: was it (if the story be persisted in) the (forged) English Mercurie of July 23, 1588, or the London Times of the nineteenth century?

Spenser, Edmund, one of the three most eminent English poets, was b. in London in 1552 or 1553, (most probably the former,) and d. Jan. 16, 1598–9, at a lodging-house in King Street, Westminster. He was immediately descended from the Spensers of Hurstwood, Lancashire, and claimed kindred ("and had his claims allowed") with the family of Sir John Spenser of Althorp. (See Mother Hubberds Tale: Phillis, Charyllis, and sweet Amaryllis,—the poet's kinswomen.) He was admitted a sizar of Pembroke Hall, May 20, 1569; became B.A. Jan. 16, 1573, M.A. June 26, 1576, and on leaving college paid a visit to his connections in Lancashire; found there a fair damsel, the "widdowe's daughter of the glenne," and, as in poetic-duty bound, immediately fell deeply in love, and celebrated his own devotion and the lady's charms under the orthodox names of Colin and Rosalinde. (See The Shepheardes Calendar, Eclogues April and June, and Colin Clout's Come Home Again.) Who this lady was has been a fruitful subject of debate for more than two centuries; though the college friend of the swain, E. K., (Edmund Kirke?) who contributed the Introductory Epistle and the Notes to the Shepheardes Calendar, gives a broad hint in the remark that Rosalinde is a "feigned name, which, being well ordered, will bewray the very name of his love and mistress." According to a late American critic, Mr. Halpin, (see Atlantic Monthly, Boston, Nov. 1858, 677,) the proper "ordering" of Rosalinde is Rose Daniel, a sister of a historian and poet chronicled on a preceding page, (Daniel, Samuel, p. 474,) who subsequently rejected "Colin" and became the wife of another of our family of authors, John Florio, the Resolute, (p. 608, supra.) The conduct of the disappointed suitor was worthy of the imitation of all fellow-sufferers: he did not suddenly awake to an affected consciousness of the real insignificance of those charms and virtues which had been wooed in vain, but, on the contrary, fourteen years later, (see his Colin Clovts Come Home Againe, supposed to have been written in 1591,) exalts her merits and attractions in the highest strains, and finds fault only with the ambition which prompted such unbecoming aspirations:

> "Not then to her that scorned thing so base,
> But to myselfe the blame that lookt so hie."

Of course he could never be consoled,—never think of another love:

> "And ye, my fellow shepheards, which do see
> And hear the languors of my too long dying,
> Unto the world for ever witnesse bee,
> That hers I die, nought to the world denying
> This simple trophe of her great conquest."

But—alas for lovers' vows!—in this same year, or the next, the poet met with a beautiful Irish girl, ("Elizabeth,") probably Miss Nagle, who, after a pursuit of two years, consented to be captured,—it would appear, not a moment too soon: but he shall tell his own story:

> "Lyke as a huntsman after weary chace,
> Seeing the game from him escapt away,
> Sits downe to rest him in some shady place,
> With panting hounds beguiled of their prey,
> So, after long pursuit and vaine assay,
> When I all weary had the chace forsooke,
> The gentle deer returned the selfe-same way,
> Thinking to quench her thirste at the next brooke:
> There she, beholding me with mylder looke,
> Sought not to flye, but fearless still did bide;
> Till I in hand her, yet halfe trembling, tooke,
> And with her owne good will her fyrmely tyde;
> Strange thing, me seemd, to see a beast so wyld
> So goodly wonne, with her owne will beguyld."
> Sonnet 67: see, also, Sonnet 62: Amoretto, 1595.

Not so "strange" as he makes it: Irish girls of the sixteenth century seem to have been much like other girls of other centuries.

The bridegroom celebrated his nuptials with this lovely being in those magnificent strains which have made this event forever memorable in the chronicles of the marriages of poets:

"Spenser's Epithalamium on his own marriage, written perhaps in 1594," remarks an eminent critic, "is of a far higher mood than any thing we have named. It is a strain redolent of a bridegroom's joy and of a poet's fancy. The English language seems to expand itself with a copiousness unknown before, while he pours forth the varied imagery of this splendid little poem. I do not know any other nuptial song, ancient or modern, of equal beauty. It is an intoxication of ecstacy, ardent, noble, and pure."—Hallam: Lit. Hist. of Europe, Pt. 2, 1550–1600, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 127.

Mr. Collier, in his new edition of Spenser, (1862, infra,) would have us believe that this was Spenser's second marriage (it occurred in 1595) since his rejection by Rosalinde; but we imagine that the verdict of the reader will be, "Not proven." It seemed proper—it was certainly pleasant—to accompany the poet through his courtships, contrasting the result of the first and (at least) the second of these enterprises: we must now return to an earlier period of his life.

In 1578, at the suggestion of Gabriel Harvey, with whom he had contracted a friendship at Pembroke Hall, (see Harvey, Gabriel, LL.D., No. 1,) Spenser came to London, where, by the good offices of the scholar who had invited him to the metropolis, he was introduced to Sir Philip Sidney, who presented him to the Earl of Leicester. Nine years before this, he had read his verses—not his name—in print.

In May, 1569, (in French, Lon., 1568, 8vo,) John Vander Noodt, a Flemish physician living in England, published a collection entitled A Theatre wherein be represented as wel the Miseries and Calamities that follow the voluptuous Worldlings, as also the great Ioyes and Plesures which the Faithfull do enioy, sm. 8vo, pp. 276. Prefixed to the contents of this volume are 21 engravings on wood, being illustrations of the Visions of Petrarch and of Bellay; and these are illustrated by metrical versions, called Epigrams and Sonnets, by Spenser, then about seventeen years of age. They are without his name, but appear, with alterations, in his Complaints, published in 1591.

Vander Noodt's volume is very rare: it is priced in the Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 779, £25; the same copy was sold at Midgeley's for £15 4*s.* 6*d.*, and Bindley's copy was sold for £22 1*s.* A copy in J. Lilly's Catalogue, Nov.–Dec. 1857, p. 83, is priced £10 10*s.* Since this juvenile essay he had, from time to time, employed his pen both in prose and poetry. A portion of these etchings were afterwards incorporated with the Faerie Queene; others—The Dying Pelicane, Stemmata Dudleiana, &c.—have been lost.

In 1579 (the year after his arrival in London) he published (anonymously) The Shepheardes Calendar, (ascribed by some of his contemporaries to Sir Philip Sidney;) in 1580 he became, through the influence of Sidney, Secretary to Lord Grey of Wilton, Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland; and in 1586 received from the crown a grant of 3029 acres (including the castle and manor of Kilcolman) in the county of Cork, forfeited by the Earl of Desmond. In 1588 he was appointed Clerk of the Council of Munster, and in the next year received from Sir Walter Raleigh the memorable visit to which we have already briefly alluded in our life of the latter, referring the reader, for fuller particulars, to Spenser's own charming narration in Colin Clovts Come Home Againe. When was a poet ungrateful for the timely appearance of a genial and appreciative auditor? Such a one—The Shepheard of the Ocean, as the poet styles him—now listened with delight to the noble verses of the Faerie Queene, of which Books I. and II. and almost all of Book III. were ready for the press. Raleigh thought this indeed "a dish to set before a Queen," and—for authors are not proverbially incredulous respecting the merits of their compositions—he encouraged the hopes of the minstrel, and took him with him to England. Let us quote Spenser's own version of this most interesting interview and its effects:

> "One day (quoth he) I sat (as was my trade)
> Under the foot of Mole, that mountain hore,
> Keeping my sheepe amongst the cooly shade
> Of the greene alders by the Mullaes shore:
> There a straunge shepheard chaunst to find me out;
> Whether allured with my pipes delight,
> Whose pleasing sound yshrilled far about,
> Or thither led by chaunce, I know not right:
> Whom, when I asked from what place he came,
> And how he hight, himselfe he did ycleepe
> The Shepheard of the Ocean by name,
> And said he came far from the main-sea deepe.
> "He, sitting me beside in that same shade,
> Provoked me to plaie some pleasant fit;
> And when he heard the musicke which I made,
> He found himselfe full greatly pleased at it.
> * * * * * *
> He me perswaded forth with him to fare:
> Nought tooke I with me, but my oaten quill;
> Small needments else need shepheard to prepare
> So to the sea we came."

He brings him before the Queen: the great Elizabeth (Cynthia) listens, and is charmed:

'The Shepheard of the Ocean (quoth he)
Unto that Goddesse grace me first enhancd,
And to mine oaten pipe inclined her eare,
That she thenceforth therein gan take delight,
And it desired at timely houres to heare,
All were my notes but rude and roughly dight.
For not by measure of her own great mynd
And wondrous worth, she mott my simple song,
But ioy'd that country shepheard ought could fynd
Worth harkening to, emongst that learned throng."
Colin Clovts Come Home Againe.

The first three Books of the Faerie Queene were published in 1590, and the event was signalized by a royal grant of a pension of £50 per annum. From 1591 to 1595 he lived on his Irish estate, dividing his time between his acres, his Faerie Queene, and the more substantial Queen to whom, as we have seen, he was united by marriage in the last of the years above named. In 1595 he visited London for the purpose of attending to some business, the most agreeable part of which was the publication of Books IV., V., and VI. of his great poem, which were given to the world in 1596. The Shepherd was not entirely forgotten at court, and in September, 1598, by the influence of Elizabeth, Spenser was appointed Sheriff of the county of Cork. In the next month occurred what is called "the rebellion of the Earl of Tyrone," who,

"having dispersed the forces which were sent against him by the Earl of Ormond, ravaged and spoiled the whole county of Cork; so that Spenser was forced to seek his safety, together with his wife, in his native country, leaving his estate in Ireland to be plundered by the rebels; who, it is said, having carried off his goods, burnt his house and a [his] little child in it. However that be, it is certain he did not long survive this irretrievably ruinous calamity, which, reducing him to a state of absolute dependence, with the additional weight of a family, entirely broke his heart, and he languished under it until his death. . . . Thus, after this admirable Poet and worthy gentleman had struggled with poverty all his lifetime, he died in extreme indigence and want of bread. However, some amends was made to his fame at last; his corpse being interred in Westminster, near Chaucer, as he had desired, and his obsequies attended by the Poets of that time, and others, who paid the last honours to his memory. Several copies of verses were thrown after him into his grave; and Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex, who had married the widow of Sir Philip Sidney, was at the expense of the funeral. A handsome monument also, with an inscription, was erected in honour of him by Anne, Countess of Dorset."—Biog. Brit., 3810–12.

This monument, erected in 1620, was, by the zeal of Mason and some other admirers of genius, restored in 1778.

Ben Jonson's assertion (reported by Drummond of Hawthornden) that Spenser "died for lacke of bread," and "refused twenty pieces sent to him by my lord of Essex, adding, He was 'sorry he had no time to spend them,'" has been confidently challenged by some of those sages who are always so much better informed respecting the events of preceding ages than those who lived and moved in them; but we are obliged by all rules of evidence, however unwillingly, to credit the testimony of Spenser's contemporaries that he died in poverty. The melancholy story of the day is pathetically recited in The Returne from Parnassus, or the Scourge of Simony, publiquely acted by the Students of St. John's, Cambridge, London, 1606, 4to, (reprinted by Hawkins in his Origin of the English Drama:)

"A swiften [sweeter] swan than ever sung in Po,
A shriller nightingale than ever blest
The prouder groves of self-admiring Rome;—
Blith was each valley, and each shepherd proud,
While he did chant his carol minstrelsie;
Attentive was full many a dainty Eare,
Which hung upon his melting tongue,
While sweetly of his Fairy Queen he sung,
While to the water's fall he tun'd for fame,
And on each bark engrav'd Eliza's name:
And yet, for all, the unregarding soile
Unlaxt the line of his desired life,
Denying maintenance for his dear reliefe;
Careless care to provide his exequire,
Scarce deigning to shut up his dying eye.
* * * * *
But softly may our honours ashes rest
That lie by mery Chaucer's noble chest."

Shakspeare, also, who had written,

"Spenser to me, whose deep conceit is such As passing all conceit, needs no defence," is presumed by some commentators to have referred to the "straitness of bread" in which the poet died, in the lines in Midsummer's Night Dream, Act V., Scene I.:

"The thrice three Muses mourning for the death
Of learning, late deceas'd in beggary."

But, as the play is supposed to have been composed in 1594, about five years before Spenser's death, we agree with Mr. Knight in referring this couplet to the demise (1592) of Robert Greene.

"Poorly (poore man!) he lived; poorly (poore man!) he died," exclaims Phineas Fletcher, when lamenting the author of the Faerie Queene in his Purple Island.

Spencer left two sons,—Sylvanus and Peregrine: that his young and lovely widow, whose charms and virtues he had himself made so famous, should be sought and won, will surprise no one. She married Roger Seckerstone.

In Latin, Calendarium Pastorale, &c., 1653, 8vo, (see Bathurst, Theodore;) repub. by John Ball, with a Latin Dissertation, De Vita Spenseri et Scriptis, 1732, (some s. a.,) 8vo, some l. p. Fanshawe, we have seen, praises Bathurst's Latin version; Professor Wilson (Blackw. Mag., xxxiv. 834) declares that it is "bitter bad." John Dove, five or six years after the first publication of the Calendar, (he did not know the author,) translated it into Latin verse. "This Latin version," says Wilson, (ubi supra,) "so far from rescuing the Calendar from the grave, fell into it with a rustle of manuscript. Mr. Todd says it is good." The MS. still remains unpublished, and is, or formerly was, in the library of Caius College, Cambridge. We hope to find room for some opinions on The Shepheardes Calendar at a later stage of this article. For notices of Spenser's Letters to Harvey, published in 1580, see Harvey, Gabriel, LL.D., No. 1; Bibl. Anglo-Poet., No. 344; Bohn's Lowndes's Bibl. 2. The Faerie Qveene disposed into twelve Books, fashioning XII. Moral Vertues, 1590, 4to. Contains Books I., II., and III.; differs from the later editions.

The Second Part of the Faerie Qveene; containing the fovrth, fifth, and sixth Bookes, 1596, 4to. Two sets of both Parts are marked in Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 634, 635, at £9 9*s.* and £10 10*s.* Both Parts, 1590–1596: Earl of Charlemont, Aug. 1865, 160, £40 10*s.*; W. N. Lettsom, Nov. 1865, 112, £22 10*s.* Both Parts, known as second quarto edition, 1596, 2 vols. 4to. See Bibl. Anglo-Poet., 636. W. N. Lettsom, 113, £10; J. Lilly's Bibl. Anglo-Curiosa, 1869, £15 15*s.* Faerie Qveene, 1609, fol. J. Lilly's Bibl. Anglo-Curiosa, 1869, 122, £5 5*s.* Known as first folio edition. After the six Books appears, in this volume, the first edition of Two Cantos of Mutabilitie, which, both for forme and matter, appeare to be parcell of some following Booke of the Faerie Queene, under the legend of Constancie. Doubtless this was all that was written of the intended six additional Books of the Faerie Qveene, which by some credulous persons are supposed to have been lost at sea, or to have perished by the fire at Kilcolman Castle in 1598. See Dekker's Knight's Conjuring; Collier's Bibl. Account of Early Eng. Lit., voc. Dekker, Thomas. The second folio edition of the Faerie Queene was published in the collective edition of Spenser's Works, 1611, fol., to be noticed hereafter; and later editions of the same poem appeared: With an Exact Collation of the two Original Editions, [1590, 1596,] &c.; a New Life of the Author, [by Dr. Birch, and also a Glossary, &c., 1751, 3 vols. 4to, (J. 6. Teares of the Muses, 1591, 4to.

7. Daphnaida, 1591, 4to; 1592, 4to.

8. Amoretti [or Sonnets] and Epithalamion, 1595, 12mo. Utterson's copy was sold for £27 10s.; in J. Lilly's Catalogue, about 1857, a copy is priced £12 12s. On the library-shelf, next to this volume, should stand Spenser's Sonnetten übersetzt durch Joseph von Hammer, Wien, 1814, 8vo. Dr. Sewell and Mr. Chalmers think that Shakspeare modelled his Sonnets on Spenser's Amoretti. Dr. Drake (Shaksp. and his Times, ii. 56) "cannot accede to their position."

13. A View of the State of Ireland, 1633: see HANMER, MEREDITH, M.D. Spenser's View was republished from this Chronicle, (in which each of the three authors has a Part allotted to him,) Dubl., 1763, 12mo, (with Life of Spenser;) again, in Ancient Irish Histories, 1809, 2 vols. 8vo; and it is included in his Works. Both for matter and style it is an excellent composition; and we had intended to produce testimonies to that effect, but lack space. It is remarkable that it should have remained nearly forty years in MS. before seeing the light. Notices of it will be found in Sir J. Ware's Pref. to Ancient Chron.; Walsh's Pref. to Prospect of the State of Ireland; Flaherty's Ogygia; Bp. Nicolson's Irish Hist. Lib.; Campbell's Specimens of Eng. Poetry; Hallam's Lit. Collective Editions of Spenser's Works.

I. The Faerie Queen: The Shepheards Calendar: Together with the other Works of England's Arch-Poet: Collected into one Volume, and carefully Corrected, Lon., 1611, fol. The date at the end of the volume is 1612. This is the second folio edition of The Faerie Queene, and the first folio of the other poems. It was subsequently reissued with a title-page dated 1617, yet retaining at the end of the volume the former date, 1612. Ben Jonson's copy, with his signature and MS. notes, was priced in J. H. W. Cadby's Catalogue, Birmingham, Sept. 1865, p. 8, £21. II. The Works of Edmund Spenser, whereunto is added an Account of his Life, with other new Additions never before in Print, 1679, fol. In 1860 Mr. F. S. Ellis, of London, offered for £35 Dryden's copy of this edition, with "Glorious John's" own MS. "corrections," as certified by Jacob Tonson's note on the fly-leaf. III. The Works of Edmund Spenser, with a Glossary, Life of the Author, and an Essay on Allegorical Poetry, by Mr. Hughes, (vide p. 911, supra,) 1715, 6 vols. 12mo; l. p., r. 12mo, (Bibl. Vol. i. is eulogized by London Bookseller, Mar. 25, 1859, 796; and as a whole the edition is commended, though not without qualifications, by the London Gentleman's Magazine, 1861, i. 267. XII. Complete Works, with Life, Notes, and a Glossary, by John Payne Collier, Lon., Jan. 1862, 5 vols. 8vo, £3 15s.

"The Life of Spenser has received a more critical treatment than it has before met with. Many documents and authorities have been discovered which have only lately been capable of being adduced as evidence. . . . Mr. Collier's reputation as an editor of Elizabethan classics is well sustained by the present publication. The text of Spenser has never before been carefully edited, as the text of every Elizabethan author should be edited, by collation of the early editions. . . . By a faithful collation of every impression from the year 1579, when 'The Shepherd's Calendar' was first published, to the year 1679, Mr. Collier has been enabled to present to the reader the text of Spenser in as correct a form as conscientious criticism can procure for it."—Lon. Athen., 1862, i. 76.

Christopher North, who groaned so lugubriously over Todd's edition, exclaiming, about forty years since, (see Blackw. Mag., Nov. 1833, 824,) "There ought to be a new edition of Spenser—the most delightful of all Poets: but who is worthy to usher in the Apparition?" would doubtless have handled Collier's edition with peculiar gratification.

XIII. Globe Edition: Complete Works, Edited, from the Original Editions and Manuscripts, by R. Morris, with a Memoir by J. W. Hales, M.A., Camb. and Lon., 1869, cr. 8vo, 3s.

"In every way this is a satisfactory book,—the most satisfactory edition we possess in one volume of the works of Spenser. . . . The Life . . . is by far the most complete that has yet appeared."—Lon. Bookseller, Nov. 3, 1869.

Critical Opinions on The Shepheardes Calendar.

This series of poems was Entitvled, to Noble and Vertuous Gentleman, most worthy of all tytles, both of learning and chiualrie, Maister Philip Sidney.

Sir Philip remarks that Spenser

"hath much poetry in his eclogues, indeed worthy of the reading, if I be not deceived. That same framing of his style to an old rustic language, I dare not allow; since neither Theocritus in Greek, Virgil in Latin, nor Sannazarius in Italian, did affect it."—Defence of Poesie, 1595, 4to.

"Theocritus is famed for his Idyllia in Greek, and Virgil for his Eclogues in Latin; so Spenser, their imitator, in his Shepherd's Calendar, is renowned for the like argument, and honoured for fine poetical invention and most exquisite wit."—FRANCIS MERES: Wit's Treasurie, 1597, 4to.

See, also, Webbe's Discourse of English Poetrie, 1586

4to; Fraunce's Lawier's Logike, 1588, 4to; Puttenham's Arte of English Poesie, 1589, 4to.

"The Shepherd's Calendar of Spenser is not to be matched in any modern language,—not even by Tasso's Aminta, which infinitely transcends Guarini's Pastor Fido, as having more of nature in it, and being most clear from the wretched affectation of learning. Spenser, being master of our northern dialect, and skilled in Chaucer's English, has so exactly imitated the Dorick of Theocritus, that his love is a perfect image of that passion which God infused into both sexes, before it was corrupted with the knowledge of arts and the ceremonies of what we call good manners."—DRYDEN.

Pope, and Professor Wilson, who comments on the preceding opinion, (see Blackw. Mag., xxxiv. 830–34,) are not disposed to admit that Spenser is equal to Theocritus:

"His eclogues are somewhat too long, if we compare them with the ancients. He is sometimes too allegorical, and treats of matters of religion in a pastoral style, as the Mantuan had done before him. He has employed the lyric measure, which is contrary to the practice of the old poets. His stanza is not still the same, nor always well chosen. . . . The addition Spenser has made of a Calendar to his Eclogues, is very beautiful; since by this, besides the general moral of innocence and simplicity, which is common to other authors of pastoral, he has one peculiar to himself: he compares human life to the several seasons, and at once exposes to his readers a view of the great and little worlds, in their various changes and aspects."—POPE: A Discourse on Pastorals, 1704; prefixed to Pope's Pastorals.

"Master Edmund Spenser had done enough for the immortality of his name had he only given us his Shepherd's Kalendar; a master-piece, if any."—DRAYTON: Pref. to his Pastorals.

"Two great defects have contributed deeply to injure the popularity of his Calendar; the adoption of a language much too old and obsolete for the age in which it was written, and the too copious introduction of satire on ecclesiastical affairs."—DR. DRAKE: Shaksp. and his Times, i. 646.

"The shepherds of Spenser's 'Calendar' are parsons in disguise, who converse about heathen divinities and points of Christian theology. Palinode defends the luxuries of the Catholic clergy, and Piers extols the purity of Archbishop Grindal; concluding with the story of a fox, who came to the house of a goat in the character of a pedlar, and obtained admittance by pretending to be a sheep. This may be burlesquing Æsop, but certainly is not imitating Theocritus. There are fine thoughts and images in the 'Calendar;' but, on the whole, the obscurity of those pastorals is rather their covering, than their principal defect."—CAMPBELL: Specimens of Eng. Poet.

"Neither the Shepherd's Calendar of Spenser nor the Pastorals of Gay possess that native simplicity and close adherence to the manners and language of country life, which ought to form the basis of this kind of composition."—WILLIAM ROSCOE: Life of Lorenzo de' Medici, i.

"The dialect of Theocritus is musical to our ears, and free from vulgarity,—praises which we cannot bestow on the uncouth provincial rusticity of Spenser. He has been less justly censured on another account for intermingling allusions to the political history and religious differences of his own time. . . . If Spenser has erred in the allegorical part of his pastorals, he has done so in company with most of those who have tuned the shepherd's pipe."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 123–24. See, also, 210.

"To our minds, the irredeemable sin of the Shepherd's Calendar—we wish we could use gentler words, but cannot find them—is the cold, uncomfortable, and unhappy air that hangs in it over almost the whole of rural life; we are always wishing for the sun, but no sun shows his face. Nature is starved, and life hungry, and sleep seems but the relief from labour. There is nowhere joy."—PROFESSOR WILSON: Blackw. Mag., xxxiv. 832.

CRITICAL OPINIONS ON THE FAERIE QUEENE.

The design of this great epic is carefully set forth by The author, who assures us that "The general end therefore of all the Booke is to fashion a gentleman or noble person in vertuous and gentle discipline. . . . In which I haue followed all the antique poets historicall; first Homere, who in the persons of Agamemnon and Ulysses hath ensampled a good gouernour and a vertuous man, the one in his Ilias, the other in his Odysseis; then Virgil, whose like intention was to doe in the person of Æneas; after him Ariosto comprised them both in his Orlando; and lately Tasso dissevered them again, and formed both parts in two persons, namely that part which they in philosophy call Ethice, or vertues of a priuate man, coloured in his Rinaldo; the other named Politice in his Godfredo. By ensample of which excellente poets, I labour to pourtraict in Arthure, before he was king, the image of a braue Knight, perfected in the twelue priuate Morall Vertues, as Aristotle hath deuised; the which is the purpose of these first twelue bookes; which if I finde to be well accepted, I may be perhaps encouraged to frame the other part of Politicke Vertues in his person, after that hee came to be king."

Books I., II., and III. treat—

"The first of the Knight of the Redcrosse, in which I express Holynes: The seconde of Sir Guyon, in whom I sette forth Temperaunce: The third of Britomartis, a Lady Knight, in whom I picture Chastity."

He continues:

"But, because the beginning of the whole Worke seemeth abrupte, and as depending upon other antecedents, it needs that ye know the occasion of these three knights' seuerall Aduentures. For the methode of a poet historicall is not such, as of an historiographer. For an historiographer discourseth of affayres orderly as they were donne, accounting as well the times as the actions; but a poet thrusteth into the middest, even where it most concerneth him, and there recoursing to the things forepaste, and diuining of things to come, maketh a pleasing analysis of all! The beginning therefore of my History, if it were to be told by an historiographer, should be the Twelfth Booke, which is the last." See Spenser's Letter to Sir Walter Raleigh, prefixed to First Three Books, 1590, 4to.

Alas that this magnificent outline was never filled up! for, as we have seen, we have only Six Books and a fragment of a Seventh. Had the author reached and completed the Twelfth Book,

"The reader would have been agreeably surprised when he came to discover that the series of adventures which he had just seen completed were undertaken at the command of the Faery Queen; and the Knights had severally set forward to the execution of them from her annual birthday festival."—THOMAS WARTON: Observations on the Faerie Queene of Spenser, 1754, 8vo, &c.

"The poet supposes that the Faery Queen, according to an established annual custom, held a magnificent feast, which continued twelve days, on each of which respectively twelve several complaints are presented before her. To redress the injuries which were the occasion of these several complaints, she despatches, with proper commissions, twelve different knights, each of which, in the particular adventure allotted to him, proves an example of some particular virtue, as of Holiness, Temperance, Justice, Chastity, and has one complete book assigned to him, of which he is the hero. But besides these twelve knights, severally exemplifying twelve moral virtues, the Poet has constituted one principal knight or general hero,—Prince Arthur,—who represents, as we have seen, Magnificence, the perfection of all the rest. He, moreover, assists in every book, and at the end of his actions is to discover and win Gloriana, or Glory."—PROFESSOR WILSON: Blackw. Mag., xxxvi. 411.

Having thus presented the design and plan of the Faerie Queene, we proceed to quote the opinions of a number of eminent critics respecting the merits of the poem, or series of poems.

"[In Epic poetry] the English have only to boast of Spenser and Milton, who neither of them wanted either genius or learning to have been perfect poets, and yet both of them are liable to many censures. For there is no uniformity in the design of Spenser; he aims at the accomplishment of no one action; he raises up a hero for every one of his adventures, and endows each of them with some particular moral virtue, which renders them all equal, without subordination or preference. Every one is most valiant in his own legend; only we must do him that justice to observe that magnanimity, which is the character of Prince Arthur, shines throughout the whole poem, and succours the rest when they are in distress. The original of every knight was then living in the court of Queen Elizabeth; and he attributed to each of them that virtue which he thought was most conspicuous in them,—an ingenious piece of flattery, though it turned not much to his account. Had he lived to finish his poem, in the six remaining legends, it had certainly been more of a piece, but could not have been perfect, because the model was not true. But Prince Arthur, or his chief patron, Sir Philip Sidney, whom he intended to make happy by the marriage of his Gloriana, dying before him, deprived the poet both of means and spirit to accomplish his design. For the rest, his obsolete language and the ill choice of his stanza are faults but of the second magnitude; for, notwithstanding the first, he is still intelligible, at least after a little practice; and for the last, he is the more to be admired that, labouring under such a difficulty, his verses are so numerous, so various, and so harmonious that only Virgil, whom he professedly imitated, has surpassed him among the Romans, and only Mr. Waller among the English."—DRYDEN: Preface to the trans. of Juvenal, 1693, fol.

"Milton has acknowledged to me that Spenser was his original."—DRYDEN: Preface to his Fables. See, also, Edin. Rev., xxxvi. 7.

"The religion of the Gentiles had been woven into the contexture of all the ancient poetry with an agreeable mixture, which made the moderns affect to give that of Christianity a place also in their poems; but the true religion was not found to become fictitious so well as the false one had done, and all their attempts of this kind had seemed rather to debase religion than heighten poetry. Spenser endeavoured to supply this with morality, and make instruction, instead of story, the subject of an epic poem. His execution was excellent, and his flights of fancy very noble and high. But his design was poor; and his moral lay so bare that it lost the effect. It is true, the pill was gilded, but so thin that the colour and the taste were easily discovered."—SIR WILLIAM TEMPLE: Essay on Poetry: Miscellanea, 1689–90, 2 Pts. 8vo.

"Spenser may be reckoned the first of our heroic poets. He had a large spirit, a sharp judgment, and a genius for heroic poetry, perhaps above any that ever wrote since Virgil; but our misfortune is, he wanted a true idea, and lost himself by following an unfaithful guide. Though besides Homer and Virgil he had read Tasso, yet he rather suffered himself to be misled by Ariosto, with whom blindly rambling on marvels and adventures, he makes no conscience of probability; all is fanciful and chimerical, without any uniformity, or without any foundation in truth: in a word, his poem is perfect Fairy-land."—THOMAS RYMER: on Trag., &c.

"Unhappily for literature, at least, for the learned of this age, the queen's vanity lay more in shining by her own learning than in encouraging men of genius by her liberality. Spenser himself, the first English writer of his age, was long neglected, and after the death of Sir Philip Sidney, his patron, was allowed to die almost for want. This poet contains great beauties; a sweet and harmonious versification, easy elocution, a fine imagination: yet does the perusal of his work become so tedious, that one never finishes it from the mere pleasure which it affords. It soon becomes a kind of task reading; and it requires some effort and resolution to carry us to the end of his long performance. This effect, of which every one is conscious, is usually ascribed to the change of manners. But manners have more changed since Homer's age; and yet that poet remains still the favourite of every reader of taste and judgment. Homer copied true natural manners, which, however rough or uncultivated, will always form an agreeable and interesting picture. But the pencil of the English poet was employed in drawing the affectations and conceits and fopperies of chivalry, which appear ridiculous as soon as they lose the recommendation of the mode. The tediousness of continued allegory, and that too seldom striking or ingenious, has also contributed to render the Fairy Queen peculiarly tiresome; not to mention the too great frequency of its descriptions, and the languor of its stanza. Upon the whole, Spenser maintains his place upon the shelves among our English classics; but he is seldom seen on the table; and there is scarcely any one, if he dares to be ingenuous, but will confess that, notwithstanding all the merit of the poet, he affords an entertainment with which the palate is soon satiated. Several writers of late have amused themselves in copying the style of Spenser; and no imitation has been so indifferent as not to bear a great resemblance to the original. His manner is so peculiar that it is almost impossible not to transfer some of it into the copy."—David Hume: Hist. of Eng., Reign of Elizabeth, Appendix.

We have here some of the same dogmatism which is displayed still more offensively in the historian's unfortunate Essay on Miracles. Many—some we shall presently quote whose "ingenuousness" we have no right to question—have not found their "palates soon satiated" with the Faerie Queene.

Imitations of Spenser, to which Hume refers, are rebuked by an acute—often a correct—critic, a portion of whose reflections we shall next quote:

"To imitate the fictions and sentiments of Spenser can incur no reproach; for allegory is perhaps one of the most pleasing vehicles of instruction. But I am very far from extending the same respect to his diction as his stanza. His style was in his own time allowed to be vicious, so darkened with old words and peculiarities of phrase, and so remote from common use, that Jonson boldly pronounces him to have written no language. [But did not Jonson refer to the Shepheardes Calendar?] His stanza is at once difficult and unpleasing; tiresome to the ear by its uniformity, and to the attention by its length. It was at first formed in imitation of the Italian poets, without due regard to the genius of our language."—Dr. Johnson: Rambler, No. 121, May 14, 1751.

See, also, Johnson's Epigram on Colley Cibber.

How utterly incapable some imitators of Spenser are of appreciating their great original, is strikingly illustrated in the lines in which Shenstone performs for himself the critical office which Dogberry desired another to do for him:

"When I bought Spenser first, I read a page or two of 'The Faerie Queene,' and cared not to proceed. After that Pope's 'Alley' made me consider him ludicrously; and in that light I think one may read him with pleasure."

The Schoolmistress, which owes its birth to this view of the subject, has been already considered: (see Shenstone, William, No. 3.)

"The poetry of Spenser is remarkable for brilliant imagination, fertile invention, and flowing rhythm; yet, with all these recommendations, it is cold and tedious. To the English reader the 'Faerie Queene' presents the charm of antiquated style, which never fails to please us in our own language, but which we cannot appreciate in a foreign tongue. . . . Spenser is the author of a sort of essay on the manners and antiquities of Ireland, [vide No. 11, supra,] which I prefer to his Faerie Queene."—Viscount de Chateaubriand: Sketches of Eng. Lit., i. 226, 227.

"It is scarcely possible to accompany Spenser's allegorical heroes to the end of their excursions. They want flesh and blood,—a want for which nothing can compensate. The personification of abstract ideas furnishes the most brilliant images for poetry; but these meteor forms, which startle and delight us when our senses are flurried by passion, must not be submitted to our cool and deliberate examination."—Ellis: Specimens of Eng. Poet.

"Even Spenser himself, though assuredly one of the greatest poets that ever lived, could not succeed in the attempt to make allegory interesting. It was in vain that he lavished the riches of his mind on the House of Pride and the House of Temperance. One unpardonable fault, the fault of tediousness, pervades the whole of the Fairy Queen. We become sick of cardinal virtues and deadly sins, and long for the society of plain men and women. Of the persons who read the first canto, not one in ten reaches the end of the first book, and not one in a hundred perseveres to the end of the poem. Very few and very weary are those who are in at the death of the Blatant Beast. If the last six books, which are said to have been destroyed in Ireland, had been preserved, we doubt whether any heart less stout than that of a commentator would have held out to the end."—Lord Macaulay: Edin. Rev., Dec. 1831, 451-2: The Pilgrim's Progress; repub. in his Crit. and Histor. Essays.

See, also, his criticism on Dante, in Knight's Quar. Mag., Jan. 1824, repub. in his Miscell. Writings, Lon., 1860, 2 vols. 8vo, his Later Essays and Poems, N. York, 1860, 12mo, and his Crit. and Miscell. Essays, 1860, 6 vols. 12mo. Did we end our quotations here, one might well suppose that the lament of a warm admirer of the Faerie Queene was well sustained:

"The Faery Queen, one of the noblest productions of modern poetry, is fallen into so general a neglect, that all the zeal of the commentators is esteemed officious and impertinent, and will never restore it to those honours which it has, once for all, irrecoverably lost."—Bishop Hurd.

With what satisfaction would the good bishop have hailed Mr. Collier's critical edition! Let us adduce some proofs that in the present century this great poem has secured admirers as enthusiastic as the prelate himself, or as Pope,—whose eulogium we shall preface by his comments on Addison's criticism, which he warmly resented. Addison had written,

> "Old Spenser next, warm'd with poetic rage,
> In ancient times amus'd a barb'rous age;
> An age, that yet uncultivate and rude,
> Where'er the poet's fancy led, pursued,
> Thro' pathless fields and unfrequented floods,
> To dens of dragons and enchanted woods.
> But now the mystic tale, that pleas'd of yore,
> Can charm an understanding age no more;
> The long-spun allegories fulsome grow,
> While the dull moral lyes too plain below.
> We view well pleased, at distance, all the sights,
> Of arms and palfries, battles, fields, and fights,
> And damsels in distress, and courteous knights;
> But when we look too near, the shades decay,
> And all the pleasing landscape fades away."
> An Account of the Greatest English Poets.

Letter to Henry Sacheverell, April 3, 1694: Addison's Works, H. G. Bohn's ed., 1854, i. 23.

On these lines Pope comments,

"The character he gives of Spenser is false too, [as well as that of Chaucer;] and I have heard him say that he never read Spenser till fifteen years after he wrote it."—Spence's Anecdotes, sect. i., 1728–30.

Let us hear Pope's own opinion of Spenser:

"After reading a canto of Spenser two or three days ago to an old lady between seventy and eighty years of age, she said that I had been showing her a gallery of pictures. I don't know how it is, but she said very right: there is something in Spenser that pleases one as strongly in one's old age as it did in one's youth. I read the Faerie Queene, when I was about twelve, with infinite delight; and I think it gave me as much when I read it over about a year or two ago."—Ibid., 1743–44. See, also, Pope's Works, Bowles's ed., ii. 289, (Pope's imitation of Spenser.)

On another occasion he remarked,

"Spenser has ever been a favourite poet to me: he is like a mistress whose faults we see, but love her with them all."

The Faerie Queene was also the delight of Scott's boyhood:

"But Spenser I could have read forever. Too young to trouble myself about the allegory, I considered all the knights and ladies and dragons and giants in their outward and exoteric sense; and God only knows how delighted I was to find myself in such society. As I had always a wonderful facility in retaining in my memory whatever verses pleased me, the quantity of Spenser's stanzas which I could repeat was really marvellous."—Ashestiel MS.: Lockhart's Life of Scott, ch. i.

Later in life Scott did not hesitate to say,

"No author, perhaps, ever possessed and combined in so brilliant a degree the requisite qualities of a poet. Learned, according to the learning of his times, his erudition never appears to load or incumber his powers of imagination; but even the fictions of the classics, worn out as they are by every pedant, become fresh and captivating themes when adopted by his fancy and accommodated to his plan. If that plan has now become to the reader of riper years somewhat tedious and involved, it must be allowed, on the other hand, that, from Cowley downwards, every youth of imagination has been enchanted with the splendid legends of the Faery Queen."—Edin. Rev., Oct. 1803, 203: Todd's Edition of Spenser.

Southey was one of these "youths:"

"No young lady of the present generation falls to a new novel of Sir Walter Scott's with keener relish than I did that morning to the Faery Queen. . . . The delicious landscapes which he luxuriates in describing brought every thing before my eyes. I could fancy such scenes as his lakes and forests, gardens and fountains, presented; and I felt, though I did not understand, the truth and purity of his feelings, and that love of the beautiful and the good which pervades his poetry."—Recollections: Life and Corresp. of Southey, ch. xi. See, also, Malory, Sir Thomas.

In his later years he writes,

"He is the great master of English versification,—incomparably the greatest master in our language. Without being insensible to the defects of the Fairy Queen, I am never weary of reading it."—Southey to Landor, Jan. 11, 1811: Southey's Life and Corresp., ch. xvi.

See, also, Landor's Imaginary Conversations. Again:

"Do you love Spenser? I have him in my heart of hearts."—To C. H. Townshend, Feb. 10, 1816: ibid., ch. xx.

Southey is said to have read the Faerie Queene through about thirty times. It will be observed that the tide is turning strongly in Spenser's favour—we shall not oppose it:

"I have finished the 'Faerie Queene.' I never parted from a ong poem with so much regret. He is a poet of a most musical ear,—of a tender heart,—of a peculiarly soft, rich, fertile, and flowery fancy. His verse always flows with ease and nature, most abundantly and sweetly; his diffusion is not only pardonable, but agreeable. Grandeur and energy are not his characteristic qualities. He seems to me a most genuine poet, and to be justly placed after Shakspeare and Milton, and above all other English poets. . . . Sir Philip Sidney, Sir Walter Raleigh, Bacon, Shakspeare, and Spenser! What a glorious reign!"—SIR JAMES MACKINTOSH: Diary, April 6, 1812, (see, also, April 2, 3, and 4:) Life, ch. iii.

"His command of imagery is wide, easy, and luxuriant. He threw the soul of harmony into our verse, and made it more warmly, tenderly, and magnificently descriptive than it ever was before, or, with a few exceptions, than it has ever been since. It must certainly be owned that in description he exhibits nothing of the brief strokes and robust power which characterize the very greatest poets; but we shall nowhere find more airy and expansive images of visionary things, a sweeter tone of sentiment, or a finer flush in the colours of language, than in this Rubens of English poetry. His fancy teems exuberantly in minuteness of circumstance, like a fertile soil sending bloom and verdure through the utmost extremities of the foliage which it nourishes."—CAMPBELL: Specimens of Brit. Poet.

"His versification is in many passages beautifully harmonious; but he has frequently permitted himself, whether for the sake of variety or from some other cause, to baulk the ear in the conclusion of a stanza. The inferiority of the last three books to the former is surely very manifest. His muse gives gradual signs of weariness; the imagery becomes less vivid, the vein of poetical description less rich, the digressions more frequent and verbose. . . . But we must not fear to assert, with the best judges of this and of former ages, that Spenser is still the third name in the poetical literature of our country, and that he has not been surpassed, except by Dante, in any other."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 138–9, 142. And see Index.

"To our tongue the sonnet is mortal, and the parent of insipidity. The imitation in some degree of it was extremely noxious to a true poet, our Spenser; and he was the more injudicious by lengthening his stanza in a language so barren of rhymes as ours, and in which several words whose terminations are of similar sounds are so rugged, uncouth, and unmusical. The consequence was, that many lines which he forced into the service to complete the quota of his stanza are unmeaning, or silly, or tending to weaken the thought he would express."—Horace Walpole to William Roscoe, April 4, 1795: Letters, ed. 1861, ix. 454. See, also, ii. 257.

"Spenser's descriptions are not in the true sense of the word picturesque, but are composed of a wondrous series of images, as in our dreams."—COLERIDGE: Remains, i. 93.

In this dictum—if to be taken according to its apparent meaning—Mr. Hallam (ubi supra) cannot acquiesce; and it will be remembered that Charles Lamb (Sanity of True Genius: see, also, Lon. Athen., 1848, 800) draws a distinction between Spenser's images and those presented in sleep.

Mr. Hallam also quotes Coleridge's remarks on Spenser's versification. Moore (Memoirs, iv. 51) chronicles some of Coleridge's observations on the same subject. See, also, Coleridge's Biog. Lit., 16.

Headley remarks that

"Spenser's works are an inexhaustible mine of the richest materials, forming in fact the very bullion of our language; and it is to be lamented that they are so rarely explored for present use."—Select Beauties of Anc. Eng. Poets.

Mr. Marsh tells us that Spenser uses 81 per cent. of Anglo-Saxon, and 19 per cent. only of other words. (Lects. on the Eng. Lang., 1860, 120, n.; see, also, 112, 136, 177, 234, 350, 372, 400, n., 468, 469, n., 479, n., 483, 485, 514, 526, 527, 529, 530, 534, 539, 540, 548, 567, 568, 585, 676.)

"Lord Chatham, according to Mrs. A. Pitt, was always reading Spenser. . . . She said [to Mr. Grattan] he had never read but one book,—The Fairy Queen. . . . 'He who knows Spenser,' says Burke, 'has a good hold on the English tongue.' [Fox] liked a book of Spenser exceedingly, before something else."—Recollec. by Samuel Rogers, 1859, 66, 181.

The religious character of the Faerie Queene has been referred to. We revert to the subject:

"The claim of Spenser to be considered as a sacred poet does by no means rest upon his hymns alone. . . . But whoever will attentively consider the Fairy Queen itself will find that it is, almost throughout, such as might have been expected from the author of those truly sacred hymns. It is a continual, deliberate endeavour to enlist the restless intellect and chivalrous feelings of an inquiring and romantic age on the side of goodness and faith, of purity and justice. . . . Spenser, then, was essentially a sacred poet; but the delicacy and insinuating gentleness of his disposition were better fitted to the veiled than the direct mode of instruction. . . . To Spenser, therefore, upon the whole, the English reader must revert as being pre-eminently the sacred poet of his country."—KEBLE: Lon. Quar. Rev., 225, 228, 231: Sacred Poetry.

"You tuned my ears to the melody of Spenser's Rhymes, a poet remarkable as well for divine morality as fancy."—HENRY MORE.

"Our sage and serious Spenser, whom I dare be known to think a better teacher than Scotus or Aquinas."—MILTON.

"To lackey him is all my pride's aspiring."—FLETCHER.

"Here's that creates a poet."—QUARLES.

"We will first honour her with a home-born testimony from the grave and diligent Spenser."—BEN JONSON: Masque of Queens.

"Divinest Spenser, heav'n-bred, happy muse!
Would any power into my braine infuse
Thy worth, or all that poets had before,
I could not praise till thou deserv'st no more."

WILLIAM BROWNE: Britannia's Pastoralls, 1613–15, 2 Pts. fol.

Quotations must cease, but not before we extract a few lines from a favourite critic:

"The finest things in Spenser are, the character of Una, in the first Book; the Cave of Mammon, and the Cave of Despair; the account of Memory, of whom it is said, among other things,

"'The wars he well remember'd of King Nine,
Of old Assarachus and Inachus divine;'

the description of Belphœbe; the story of Florimel and the Witch's Son; the Gardens of Adonis, and the Bower of Bliss; the Mask of Cupid; and Colin Clout's Vision, in the last Book.

"But some people will say that all this may be very fine, but that they cannot understand it on account of the allegory. They are afraid of the allegory, as if they thought it would bite them; they look at it as a child looks at a painted dragon, and think it will strangle them in its shining folds. This is very idle. If they do not meddle with the allegory, the allegory will not meddle with them. Without minding it at all, the whole is as plain as a pike-staff. It might as well be pretended that we cannot see Poussin's pictures for the allegory, as that the allegory prevents us from understanding Spenser. . . . The language of Spenser is full and copious to overflowing; it is less pure and idiomatic than Chaucer's, and is enriched and adorned with phrases borrowed from the different languages of Europe, both ancient and modern. . . . His versification is at once the most smooth and the most sounding in the language. . . . Spenser is the most harmonious of our stanza-writers, as Dryden is the most sounding and varied of our rhymists."—HAZLITT: Lects. on the Eng. Poets, Lects. II. and III., (and see Appendix II., Milton's Eve.)

Note Hazlitt's observations on the Spenserian stanza, and read the remarks on the same subject in Blackw. Mag., xxxvi. 421, (by Professor Wilson,) and xii. 66. Nor, indeed, must the student of English poetry fail to peruse every word of Wilson's seven famous papers on Spenser (six of them devoted to the "Faery Queen") in the same periodical, viz.: I., xxxiv. 824; II., xxxvi. 408; III., xxxvi. 681; IV., xxxvi. 715; V., xxxvii. 49; VI., xxxvii. 540; VII., xxxvii. 659.

Of the fervour and vigour of these pæans an estimate may be formed from their effect upon one of the most cautious, we had almost said coldest, of critics:

"It has been justly observed by a living writer of the most ardent and enthusiastic genius, whose eloquence is as the rush of mighty waters, and has left it for others almost as invidious to praise in terms of less rapture, as to censure what he has borne along in the stream of unhesitating eulogy, that 'no poet has ever had a more exquisite sense of the beautiful than Spenser.' . . . [Note:] I allude here to a very brilliant series of papers on the Faery Queen, published in Blackwood's Magazine during the years 1834 and 1835. [Note, 1842:] They are universally ascribed to Professor Wilson."—HALLAM: Lit. Hist. of Europe, 4th ed., 1854, ii. 136.

Rev. Michael Russell, LL.D., D.C.L., Edin., 1847–51, 3 vols. 8vo, (Spottiswoode Soc.) This edition was carefully edited from the original MSS.

"Archbishop Spotswood's Church History was penned at the special command of K. James the Sixth; who, being told that some passages in it might possibly bear too hard upon the memory of his Majesty's mother, bid him 'write the truth and spare not:' and yet he ventured not so far with a commission as Buchanan did without one."—Bp. "His prologues are the best which have been written since the time of Pope. His 'Shakspeare Ode' has hardly been exceeded by any thing in the same manner, since Gray's 'Progress of Poetry.' But the true power and originality of the man are manifested in his domestic pieces. 'The Brothers,' 'I See Thee Still,' and 'The Family Meeting' are the finest consecrations of natural affection in our literature."—Edwin P. Whipple: ubi supra.

"But here is Sprague,—the American Pope, as he has been called for his terseness, his finished elegance, his regularity of metre, and his nervous point."—Lon. Athen., 1838, 389.

"Amidst a host of competitors, Charles Sprague received the prize six times, for producing the best poems for the American stage,—an instance unprecedented in our literary annals."—Loring's Hundred Boston Orators, 413.

Sprague, Charles James, son of the preceding, has published a number of fugitive poems, one of which —The Empty House—will be found in Duyckinck's Cyc. of Amer. Lit., ii. 135.

Sprague, Timothy Dwight, graduated at Yale College, 1845, d. 1849, aged 30, edited The American Literary Magazine, Albany and Hartford, (Conn.,) 1847–49, 4 vols. 8vo.

Sprague, William B., D.D., the son of Benjamin Sprague, a descendant of the Spragues of Duxbury, Massachusetts, was b. at Andover, Connecticut, Oct. 16, 1795; fitted for college by John Adams, of Colchester Academy, and Dr. Abiel Abbot, of Coventry, Conn.; graduated at Yale College, 1815, and studied theology at Princeton Seminary, 1816–19; was colleague pastor (with the Rev. Dr. Joseph Lathrop) of the First Congregational Church in West Springfield, Mass., May, 1819–Dec. 1820, and pastor of the same from the latter date to July, 1829, when he accepted a call to the Second Presbyterian Church, Albany, New York, where he still (Jan. 1870) remains. 1. "This work is an honor to the American Church. It deserves the liberal patronage of the public; not of clergymen only, but of statesmen also; for it illustrates the influence of the Church upon the State, and the signal advantages derived by our patriots from our divines."—Bibl. Sacra.

In addition to the volumes thus enumerated, Dr. Sprague has published about 116 pamphlets,—single sermons, discourses, addresses, and orations,—of which we notice: I. Sermons: occasioned by the death of Dr. J. Lathrop, 1821; Mrs. J. Bulkley, 1833; Mrs. R. Savage, 1837; Hon. S. Van Rensselaer, 1839; President W. H. Harrison, 1841: Rev. E. D. Allen, 1843; W. "A nonsensical and illiterate history."—HENRY STUBBE: Plus Ultra reduced to a Non Plus, in his Legends no History, 1670, 4to.

Stubbe published 7 or 8 tracts against Sprat's and Glanvil's works in favour of the Royal Society: see GLANVIL, JOSEPH, Nos. 4, 5, 6; Watt's Bibl. Brit., (Stubbe, Henry.) Stubbe's verdict on Sprat's History is not to be accepted as final. Wood tells us that "some account it to be one of the most exact pieces for curiousness and delicacy of language that was ever yet extant in our tongue."—(Athen. Oxon., Bliss's ed., iv. 728;)

and a later critic remarks that

"this is one of the few books which selection of sentiment and elegance of diction have been able to preserve, though written upon a subject flux and transitory."—DR. JOHNSON: Life of Sprat, P. Cunningham's ed., ii. 74. See, also, Disraeli's Quarrels of Authors, (The Royal Society: Sir John Hill.)

"Their history [that of the Royal Society] is writ so well by Doctor Sprat that I will insist no more on them, but go on to other matters."—BISHOP BURNET: Own Times, ed. 1853, i. 351.

Young, &c., (against Sprat's life,) 1693, 4to; 1722, 8vo. 7. Discourse to his Clergy, 1695, '96, 4to; Oxf., 1761, 8vo; and in Clergyman's Instructor, 5th ed., 1843, 8vo, 235. This Discourse is greatly admired. He published a vol. of sermons on Mark x. 15, Lon., 1677, 4to; eight other sermons, 1678–1705; a vol. of Sermons preached on Several Occasions, 1710, 8vo; repub. 1722, 8vo; assisted Settle in his Anti-Achitophel; annexed Observations on S. Sorbière's Voyage to England, 1709, 8vo; and prefixed a Latin Life of Cowley to Cowley's Latin Poems, 1668, '78, 8vo, which was also pub. in English, enlarged, with Cowley's English Works, 1669, fol., and later editions. A notice of his Life will be found in Dr. Johnson's Life of Cowley. Sprat's volume of Sermons (1710, '22, 8vo) is very highly esteemed:

"The correctest writer of the age, and comes nearest to the great original of Greece and Rome, by a studious imitation of the ancients. . . . His sermons are truly fine."—DR. H. FELTON: Dissert. on Reading the Classics, 1711.

"Bishop Sprat is fine, florid, and elaborate in his style."—DR. WATERLAND.

"His language is always beautiful. . . . All his sermons deserve a reading."—DR. DODDRIDGE.

But Sir John Hawkins tells us that "the tinsel of Sprat disgusted" Dr. Johnson. As a poet his reputation has never been high. Pope calls him "a worse Cowley," (Spence's Anecdotes, sect. iv.;) Johnson dismisses his claims in two or three contemptuous paragraphs, (Lives of the Eng. Poets;) Southey makes a very obvious pun on his patronymic, (Spec. of Eng. Poets, i. 168;) and a late very eminent critic considers his admission into the family of poets a disadvantage which his merits as a prose writer have not been able to overcome:

"Unhappily for his fame, it has been usual to print his verses in collections of the British poets; and those who judge of him by his verses must consider him as a servile imitator, who, without one spark of Cowley's admirable genius, mimicked whatever was least commendable in Cowley's manner; but those who are acquainted with Sprat's prose writings will form a very different estimate of his powers. He was, indeed, a great master of our language, and possessed at once the eloquence of the orator, of the controversialist, and of the historian."—LORD MACAULAY: Hist. of England, ii. ch. vi.

Against such testimony as this, the depreciation of Lord Orrery (Remarks on the Life and Writings of Swift, 1752, 237) and of Dr. Drake (Essays illustrative of the Tatler, &c., i. 69) weighs but little.

"I have heard it observed with great justice," remarks Dr. Johnson, after an enumeration of his volumes, "that every book is of a different kind, and that each has its distinct and characteristical excellence."—Life of Sprat.

Spurgeon, Rev. Charles Haddon, son of John Spurgeon, pastor of an Independent church at Tollesbury, Essex, and grandson of James Spurgeon, pastor of an Independent church at Stambourne, near Halsted, Essex, was b. at Kelverdon, Essex, June 19, 1834; educated at a school in Colchester and at the agricultural college at Maidstone; subsequently spent a year as usher in Mr. Swindell's school at Manchester, and afterwards acted in the same capacity at Mr. Leeding's school at Cambridge; in 1850 joined the Baptist Church at Cambridge, in the same year preached his first sermon at Teversham, and shortly afterwards became pastor of the Baptist Chapel at Waterbeach; in 1853 accepted a call to the New Park Street Church, Southwark, London, which it was necessary to enlarge, the preacher temporarily holding forth at Exeter Hall; October 19, 1856, commenced his ministrations at the Surrey Music Hall by a sermon to 14,000 persons, and in 1861 moved to his new Tabernacle on the Kensington Road, capable of holding 5000 to 6000 hearers.

In the autumn of 1854 was commenced the publication, at short intervals, of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons, and by the close of the year Mr. Joseph Passmore commenced a regular weekly issue of them in penny numbers, under the title of The New Park Street Pulpit. These were collected into octavo volumes, one at the commencement of each year,—vols. i.–xiv., 1856–69. Sheldon & Co., of New York,—who voluntarily allow the author an interest in his works,—have republished his Sermons in 8 vols. 12mo, (1856–68,) of which the aggregate sale in New York to Nov. 1, 1869, was about 310,000 volumes. Three volumes of his Sermons were translated into German in 1863. Mr. Spurgeon has also published: 2. The Saint and his Saviour, Lon., 1857, 12mo; 1867, 12mo; 1869, cr. 8vo; N. York, 1857, 12mo. 3.
